Deputy County Clerk, E. L. Helms, issued three marriage licenses during the holidays: Dec. 22d, Jas. A. Callan, of Lawrenceburg, Ind., to Miss Ethel Marie Nixon, daughter of Ennis Nixon, of Gasburg; Dec. 26, Rev. Robert Henry Carter, of Petersburg, and Miss Virginia Adams Cook, of Lexington, Ky.; Dec. 30th, William Henry Crisler, Olney, Illinois, and Miss Effie Lee Hensley, of Petersburg. Mr. Callan is an estimable young gentleman and he and his bride have gone to housekeeping in Lawrenceburg. Miss Ethel was a young society lady of our suburban village, and will be greatly missed by the younger set. Rev. Carter performed the ceremony on the 24th at the bride's home. Rev. Carter, the elegant, scholarly gentlemen, married at Lexington, on the 29th, and he and his bride will arrive here Jan. 1st. He is the pastor of the Christian church at this place, and is greatly loved by the entire community. "Billy" Crisler, "dropped in" from Olney, Illinois, ostensibly to spend a few days with "Pappy" Crisler, but before he was in our little city many hours it was evident that his mission was of far greater importance. He soon appeared at Deputy Clerk Helms' office, and asked for certain important papers. Rev. S. J. Bradley tied the nuptial knot. The groom is the only son of Mr. and Mrs. B. J. Crisler, proprietors of Crisler Hotel. The bride is a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Wm. H. Hensley, a beautiful and talented young lady, and the recognized leader of Petersburg's young society set. The happy couple have gone to Olney, Illinois, where a beautifully furnished home awaited them. Billy is the chief operator, and has full charge of the Western Union Telegraph office at that place. They start on life's journey under the brightest of skies, and leave Petersburg with the best wishes of all.

The Associated Charities organized here on Christmas eve has the following for its objects: To stop wholesale begging by tramps, etc.; to do away with the practice of giving to "Tom," "Dick" and "Harry" without investigating as to their worthiness; to prevail upon property owners not to rent their houses without first ascertaining if the applicant will make a desirable citizen; to make a certain set of lazy men, who do not provide for their wives and children, "get busy," or take legal steps to take their children from them and place them in some institution where they will be given food, clothing and an education. The following board was elected to serve for all time: Chairman, Benjamin H. Herkshire; W. T. Stott, D. B. Hoffman, E. L. Helms, Stanley Crouch, Owen Allen, J. W. Snyder. Rev. S. J. Bradley, secretary; Rev. R. H. Carter, treasurer. The following is addressed to the citizens of Petersburg by the board:—"We want your cooperation in this work, for without it we can do nothing. We have been advised by our town trustees that they will "back us up," and adopt such ordinances as are necessary. So when your building is empty don't be too hasty in renting it, and if in doubt as to your prospective rentor, consult the above named association. Remember, also, not to give anything—money, food or clothes—or anything whatsoever, to anyone without first consulting the association. Remember this is your work as well as that of the association, and you must cooperate with it to make it as it should be. Think over this matter seriously. You know you have been 'beat' out of your rent time after time. You have been imposed upon countless times by a gang of professional beggars, who travel through the country in wagons; by a gang that 'dumps in' here from Aurora and Lawrenceburg every time when the 'frost first begins to fly,' making a very undesirable citizen ship. The association will do its utmost to help the worthy needy in the way of clothes, provisions and money, and asks your aid. Money, clothing or provisions should be handed to Rev. Bradley or Rev. Carter. In conclusion, Mr. Citizen, do not give anything directly to anyone, but give that which you have to give to the above association, which will see that you are not being imposed upon.

ERLANGER.

The annual banquet given by the Masonic Friday night of last week, was highly complimentary to the brothers of Good Faith Lodge. It was a time when the ladies sat at ease and as of old were waited upon by the gallant knights. The brothers left the impression that they must have waiters trained in school in the lodge. Much skill and talent was displayed in the colored minstrels, who were compelled to respond to encore after encore. The recitations, vocal and piano solos were especially to be commended. There were about 150 prominent people present.

Erlanger Epworth League held watch-night services at the M. E. church, last Thursday evening, from 9:30 to 12 o'clock. In view of the fact that a stray notice had found its way into the paper that there would be no service there was quite a number of people present. It was an informal social and devotional meeting, and much enjoyed by all. Sweet, indeed, was the duet, "New Year's Carrol," by Misses Anna Lee and Maytie Tanner. These young voices were a beautiful blending of God's sweetest gift in song, and it may well be said that music is a "soul winner." "The League Rally Song" was sung by John, Robert and Harry McCullum, Logan Thomas and Epworth Lee, and it was truly delightful to hear the boys sing, which means that things will be a go when the boys take hold of them. Quite unique was the reading of the last will and testament of the Old Year; many strange and laughable things were bequeathed to the members; upon Harry McCollum was placed quite an obligation, and we believe he is ready to answer all questions concerning it. A poem entitled "The Gate and the Goal," written especially for the League by Mrs. Souther was also read. It represented the League as the "Gate" and Christ the "Goal." According to the will John McCollum is hereafter to be the League pest. Just before 12 o'clock Mrs. John Souther read "The Death of the Old Year," (Tennyson) with much force and impression. At five minutes of twelve every one present knelt in prayer, a short prayer suiting the occasion was delivered by the former first vice-president, then silence reigned until the Old Church Bell tolled forth the Death of the Old Year, and the birth of the New. It was a sight to live in memory those those young people brought in reverence as the Old Year drew its last breath, after which they arose and with many good wishes for the Glad New Year they departed for their homes. For some 20 minutes Epworth Lee pulled away at the bell rope. At a recent election of officers Mrs. Souther declined to be reelected to the first vice-Presidency, feeling that the work of the League might be too much of a strain on her, owing to the serious illness she had so recently been through, but thru the writer and these columns returns much gratitude for the kindness and appreciation that prompted the unanimous nomination for her reelection, and prays that should the Leaguers at any time meet with discouragement that they will trample it under foot and walk across it into victory.

BURLINGTON, - - KENTUCKY.

A New Industry.

It is quite possible that a new and important industry will be developed in this country. There has been commendable effort, national and state, looking to the protection of game animals and the preservation of species that have become well-nigh extinct through the waste permitted in earlier years. Now a step ahead may be taken. The federal government, through the department of agriculture, is giving the matter attention. The department proposes to aid the people in going into the business of producing venison for profit. A circular has been sent forth in which the following recommendations are made: "As a result of the growing scarcity of game animals in this country the supply of venison is wholly inadequate to the demands, and the time seems opportune for developing the industry of deer farming, which may be made profitable alike to the state and to the individual engaged therein. The raising of venison for market is as legitimate a business as the growing of beef or mutton, and state laws, when prohibitory, as many of them are, should be so modified as to encourage the industry. Furthermore deer and elk may be raised to advantage on rough, brushy ground unfit for either agriculture or stock raising, thus utilizing for profit much land that is now waste. An added advantage is that the business is well adapted to landowners of small means." Several gentlemen who have attempted to raise deer for the market report that they have had very satisfactory returns. And if deer, why not buffaloes and other animals?

Don't Forget to Forget.

"Brooding over the past, however ruinous and foolish it has been, is useless—only a waste of strength and opportunity," says J. R. Miller. "Nothing good ever comes of it. The Japanese have a proverb:

"'My skirt with tears is always wet,
I have forgotten to forget.'

"Too many people forget to forget. St. Paul's way was better. He forgot the things that were behind, whether mistakes or attainments, left them altogether in the past, and stretching forward to the things that were before, he used all his energy and strength to achieve them. Good wishes at the beginning of the year or on one's birthday are pleasant. They give us encouragement and put new zest into our lives. After all, however, good wishes will not come true by the mere wishing. We make our own years, and whether they are beautiful and happy or not, will depend on the kind of living we put into them."

Azerbaijan, into which Britain and Russia are prepared, if necessary, to carry the sword of peace, is the home of the descendants of the Ghebers, the ancient fire-worshipers of Persia. The whole countryside is admirably adapted to the propagation of a fire-worshiping creed; for earthquakes and caverns vomiting fumes from subterranean conflagrations abound in the neighborhood of Tabriz. One of the most remarkable caverns in the world is that of Secundereah, whose character resembles the Grotto del Cane of Naples. It gives off noxious fumes, which at certain times are certain death to man and beast. But the most astonishing place in Azerbaijan is the ruined city of Takht-i-Suleimann, or Solomon's temple. The city stands on a hill 150 feet high, with a wall of 30 feet embracing the crumbling remains of temple and shrine. In the midst is a lake. Although most of the buildings are of the Mohammedan period, there is one striking mass which has been identified as the temple of the fire-worshipers.

Phonographic records of hymns sung by Ira D. Sankey were used at a praise service in one of the Brooklyn churches on the last Sunday evening in October. Among them were "The Ninety and Nine," "Hiding in Thee," and "Simply Trusting." Just before the benediction the lights were turned low, and there came from the shadows the song, "There'll Be No Dark Valley When Jesus Comes." Then through the wonders of modern invention the voice of the dead was heard by his friends.

A Buffalo doctor says that garden worms produce cancer. The fish found that out long ago. The small boy who impales the worm will now become a sanitary auxiliary.

Esperanto is now to travel the way of Volapuk and a new world language is to be tried. The ideal, however, seems very far off. When all mankind are friends and brothers, then they will probably speak the same language; at least, the prediction that the universal brotherhood of man will find a universal tongue seems a perfectly safe and conservative one.

BIG STICK SMASHES; ROOSEVELT DEFENDS THE SECRET SERVICE

In Message to House President Declares His Statements in Previous Words to Congress Were Grossly Misunderstood.

Washington. — President Roosevelt's big stick crashed down upon the heads of Representatives Tawney of Minnesota, Smith of Iowa, Sherley of Kentucky, and Fitzgerald of New York, when the executive sent a special message to the house of representatives, berating those solons for being champions of the successful move to place limitations upon the scope of the secret service.

The president specifically said that this interpretation of the house of the secret service clause in his last message was misunderstood, and had there been any evidence which would point to the necessity of an investigation of members, such evidence would long ago have been turned over to the proper authorities.

The president's message to the resolution transmitted from the house in which the representatives asked for evidence upon which Mr. Roosevelt based his statement that the "chief argument in favor of the provision was that the congressmen did not themselves wish to be investigated by secret service men."

Message of the President and Reasons Therefor.

The message in part:

"To the House of Representatives: I have received the resolution of the house of representatives of December 17, 1908, running as follows:

"'Whereas, there was contained in the sundry civil appropriation bill which passed congress at its last session and became a law, a provision in reference to the employment of the secret service in the treasury department; and

"'Whereas, in the last annual message of the president of the United States to the two houses of congress it was stated in reference to that provision: "It is not too much to say that the amendment has been of benefit only, and could be of benefit only, to the criminal classes," and it was further stated: "The chief argument in favor of the provision was that the congressmen did not themselves wish to be investigated by secret service men," and it was further stated: "But if this is not considered, then a special exception could be made in the law, prohibiting the use of the secret service force in investigating members of congress. It would be far better to do this than to do what actually was done, and strive to prevent or at least to hamper effective action against criminals by the executive branch of the government in the country.

"'Whereas, the plain meaning of his words is that the majority of the congressmen were in fear of being investigated by secret service men and that congress as a whole was actuated by that motive in enacting the provision in question. Now, therefore,

"'Be it Resolved, That the president be requested to transmit to the house any evidence upon which he based his statements that the 'chief argument in favor of the provision was that the congressmen did not themselves wish to be investigated by secret service men,' and also to transmit to the house any evidence connecting any member of the house of representatives of the Sixtieth congress with corrupt action in his official capacity, and to inform the house whether he has instituted proceedings for the punishment of any such individual by the courts or has reported any such alleged delinquencies to the house of representatives.'

Cannot Understand Trend of the House Resolution.

"I am wholly at a loss to understand the concluding portion of the resolution. I have made no charges of corruption against congress nor against any member of the present house. If I had proof of such corruption affecting any member of the house in any matter as to which the federal government has jurisdiction, action would at once be brought, as was done in the cases of Senators Mitchell and Burton, and Representatives Williamson, Herrmann and Driggs, at different times since I have been president. This would simply be doing my duty in the execution and enforcement of the laws without respect to persons. But I do not regard it as within the province or the duties of the president to report to the house 'alleged delinquencies' of members, or the supposed 'corrupt action' of a member 'in his official capacity.' The membership of the house is by the constitution placed within the power of the house alone. In the prosecution of criminals and the enforcement of the laws the president must resort to the courts of the United States.

"In the third and fourth clauses of the preamble it is stated that the meaning of my words is that 'the majority of the congressmen are in fear of being investigated by secret service men' and that 'congress as a whole was actuated by that motive in enacting the provision in question,' and that this is an impeachment of the honor and integrity of the congress. These statements are not I think in accordance with the facts.

Declares He Said Nothing to Warrant the Statement.

"A careful reading of this message will show that I said nothing to warrant the statement that 'the majority of the congressmen were in fear of being investigated by the secret service men,' or 'that congress as a whole was actuated by that motive.' I did not make any such statement in this message. Moreover I have never made any such statement about congress as a whole, nor, with a few inevitable exceptions, about the members of congress, in any message or article or speech. On the contrary I have always not only deprecated but vigorously resented the practice of indiscriminate attack upon congress, and indiscriminate condemnation of all congressmen, wise and unwise, fit and unfit, good and bad alike. No one realizes more than I the importance of co-operation between the executive and congress, and no one holds the authority and dignity of the congress of the United States in higher respect than I do. I have not the slightest sympathy with the practice of judging men, for good or for ill, not on their several merits, but in a mass, as members of one particular body or one caste. To put together all men holding or who have held a particular office, whether it be the office of president, or judge, or governor, or member of the house of representatives, and to class them all, without regard to their individual differences, as good or bad, seems to me utterly indefensible; and it is equally indefensible whether the good are confounded with the bad in a heated and unwarranted championship of all, or in a heated and unwarranted assault upon all.

Charge in Resolution Due to Density of the Solons.

"This allegation in the resolution, therefore, must certainly be due to an entire failure to understand my message.

"The resolution continues: 'That the president be requested to transmit to the house any evidence upon which he based his statements that the 'chief argument in favor of the provision was that the congressmen did not themselves wish to be investigated by secret-service men.' This statement, which was an attack upon no one, still less upon the congress, is sustained by the facts.

"If you will turn to the Congressional Record for May 1 last, pages 5553 to 5560, inclusive, you will find the debate on this subject. Mr. Tawney of Minnesota, Mr. Smith of Iowa, Mr. Sherley of Kentucky, and Mr. Fitzgerald of New York, appear in this debate as the special champions of the provision referred to. Messrs. Parsons, Bennet and Driscoll were the leaders of those who opposed the adoption of the amendment and upheld the right of the government to use the most efficient means possible in order to detect criminals and to prevent and punish crime. The amendment in question in the committee of the whole, where no votes of the individual members are recorded, so I am unable to discriminate by mentioning the members who supported the matter, and I have no doubt that many members of the house simply followed the lead of Mr. Tawney and Smith, without having had the opportunity to know very much as to the rights and wrongs of the question.

Chip Is Knocked Off Roosevelt's Shoulder.

"I would not ordinarily attempt in this way to discriminate between members of the house, but as objection has been taken to my language, in which I simply spoke of the action of the house as a whole, and as apparently there is a desire that I should thus discriminate, I will state that I think the responsibility rested on the committee on appropriations, under the lead of the members whom I have mentioned.

"Now as to the request of the congress that I give the evidence for my statement that the chief argument in favor of the provision was that the congressmen did not themselves wish to be investigated by secret service men.

"The part of the Congressional Record to which I have referred above entirely supports this statement. Two distinct lines of argument were followed in the debate. One concerned the question whether the law permitted the employment of the secret service in departments other than the treasury, and this did not touch the merits of the service in the least. The other line of argument went to the merits of the service, whether lawfully or unlawfully employed, and here the chief if not the only argument used was that the service should be cut down and restricted because its members had 'shadowed' or investigated members of congress and other officers of the government. If we examine the debate in detail it appears that most of what was urged in favor of the amendment took the form of the simple statement that the committee held that there had been a 'violation of law' by the use of the secret service for other purposes than suppressing counterfeiting (and one or two other matters which can be disregarded), and that such language was now to be used as would effectually prevent all such 'violation of law' hereafter. Mr. Tawney, for instance, says: 'It was for the purpose of stopping the use of this service in every possible way by the departments of the government that this provision was inserted'; and Mr. Smith says: 'Now, that was the only way in which any limitation could be put upon the activities of the secret service.' Mr. Fitzgerald followed in the same vein, and by far the largest part of the argument against the employment of the secret service was confined to the statement that it was in 'violation of law.' Of course, such a statement is not in any way an argument in favor of the justice of the provision. It is not an argument for the provision at all. It is simply a statement of what the gentlemen making it conceive to have been the law.

Regarding Restrictions of the Secret Service.

"There was both by implication and direct statement the assertion that it was the law, and ought to be the law, that the secret service should only be used to suppress counterfeiting; and that the law should be made more rigid than ever in this respect.

"Incidentally I may say that in my judgment there is ample legal authority for the use with the present appropriation law to which reference was made in purpose no restrictions whatever upon the use of the secret service men, but relates solely to the disbursement of the money appropriated. Mr. Tawney in the debate stated that he had in his possession 'a letter from the secretary of the treasury received a few days ago' in which the secretary of the treasury 'himself admits that the provisions under which the appropriation has been made have been violated year after year for a number of years in his own department.' I append herewith as appendix A, the letter referred to. It makes no such admission as that which Mr. Tawney alleges. It contains on the contrary, as you will see by reading it, an 'emphatic protest against any such abridgment of the rights delegated to the secretary of the treasury by existing law,' and concludes by asserting that he is quite within his rights in thus employing the service of these agents' and that the proposed modification which Mr. Tawney succeeded in carrying through would be 'distinctly to the advantage of violators of criminal statutes of the United States.' I call attention to the fact that in this letter of Secretary Cortelyou to Mr. Tawney, as in my letter to the speaker quoted herein, the explicit statement is made that the proposed change will be for the benefit of the criminals, a statement which I simply reiterated in public form in my message to the congress this year, and which is also contained in effect in the report of the secretary of the treasury to the congress.

"A careful reading of the Congressional Record will also show that practically the only arguments advanced in favor of the limitation proposed by Mr. Tawney's committee, beyond what may be supposed to be contained by implication in certain sentences as to 'abuses' which were not specified, were those contained in the representations of Mr. Sherley.

"Mr. Sherley stated that there had been 'pronounced abuses growing out of the use of the secret service for purposes other than those intended,' putting his statement in the form of a question, and in the same form further stated that the 'private conduct' of members of congress, senators,' and others ought not to be investigated by the secret service, and that they should not investigate a 'member of congress' who had been accused of 'conduct unbecoming a gentleman or a member of congress.' In addition to these assertions couched as questions, he made one positive declaration, that 'This secret service at one time was used for the purpose of looking into the personal conduct of a member of congress.' This argument of Mr. Sherley, the only real argument as to the merits of the question made on behalf of the committee on appropriations, will be found in columns 1 and 2 of page 5556, and column 1 of page 5557 of the Congressional Record. In column 1 of page 5556 Mr. Sherley refers to the impropriety of permitting the secret service men to investigate men in the departments, officers of the army and navy and members of congress; in column 1, page 5557, he refers only to members of congress. His argument puts most weight on the investigation of members of congress.

"What appears in the record is filled out and explained by an article which appeared in the Chicago Inter-Ocean of January 3, 1904, under a Washington headline, and which marked the beginning of this agitation against the secret service. It was a special article of about 3,000 words, written, as I was then informed and now understand, by Mr. L. W. Busbey, at that time private secretary to the speaker of the house. It contained an utterly unwarranted attack on the secret service division of the treasury department and its chief.

"At the time of this publication the work of the secret service, which was thus assailed, included especially the investigation of great land frauds in the west, and the securing of evidence to help the department of justice in the beef-trust investigations at Chicago, which resulted in successful prosecutions.

Efforts to Kill Move Found to Be Unavailing.

"These methods proved unavailing to prevent the wrong. Messrs. Tawney and Smith, and their fellow members on the appropriations committee paid no heed to the protests; and as the obnoxious provision was incorporated in the sundry civil bill, it was impossible for me to consider or discuss it on its merits, as I should have done had it been in a separate bill. Therefore I took now taken the only method available, that of discussing it in my message to congress; and as all efforts to secure what I regard as proper treatment of the matter without recourse to plain speaking had failed, I have spoken plainly and directly, and have set forth the facts in explicit terms.

"Since 1901 the investigations covered by the secret service division—under the practice which had been for many years recognized as proper and legitimate, and which had received the sanction of the highest law officers of the government—have covered a wide range of offenses against the federal law. By far the most important of these related to the public domain, as to which there was uncovered a far-reaching and widespread system of fraudulent transactions involving both the illegal acquirement and the illegal fencing of government land; and in connection with both these offenses, the crimes of perjury and subornation of perjury. Some of the persons involved in these violations were of great wealth and of wide political and social influence. Both their corporate associations and their political affiliations, and the lawless character of some of their employes, made the investigations not only difficult but dangerous. In Colorado one of the secret service men was assassinated.

Instances in Which Secret Service Starred.

"In connection with the Nebraska prosecution the government has by decree secured the return to the government of over a million acres of grazing land; in Colorado of more than 2,000 acres of mineral land, and suits are now pending involving 150,000 acres more.

"All these investigations in the land cases were undertaken in consequence of Mr. Hitchcock, the then secretary of the interior, becoming convinced that there were extensive frauds committed in his department; and the ramifications of the frauds were so far-reaching that he was afraid to trust his own officials to deal in thoroughgoing fashion with them. One of the secret service men accordingly resigned and was appointed in the interior department to carry on this work. The first thing he discovered was that the special agents' division or corps of detectives of the land office of the interior department was largely under the control of the land thieves; and in consequence the investigations above referred to had to be made by secret service men.

"If the present law, for which Messrs. Tawney, Smith, and the other gentlemen I have above mentioned are responsible, had then been in effect, this action would have been impossible, and most of the criminals would unquestionably have escaped. No more striking instance can be imagined of the folly and wickedness of having a central corps of skilled investigating agents who can at any time be assigned, if necessary in large numbers, to investigate some violation of the federal statutes, in no matter what branch of the public service. In this particular case most of the men investigated who were public servants were in the executive branch of the government. But in Oregon, where an enormous acreage of fraudulently alienated public land was recovered for the government, a United States senator, Mr. Mitchell, and a member of the lower house, Mr. Williamson, were convicted on evidence obtained by men transferred from the secret service, and another member of congress was indicted."

The president then gave a number of other instances, all of which tend to point out the efficiency of the secret service, and his conclusion:

"In conclusion, I most earnestly ask, in the name of good government and of efficient administration, in the name of honesty and for the purpose of bringing to justice violators of the federal laws wherever they may be found, whether in public or private life, that the action taken by the house last year be reversed. When this action was taken, the senate committee, under the lead of the late Senator Allison, having before it a strongly-worded protest from Secretary Cortelyou like that he had sent to Mr. Tawney, accepted the secretary's views; and the senate passed the bill in the shape presented by Senator Allison. In the conference, however, the house conferees insisted on the retention of the provision they had inserted, and the senate yielded.

"The chief of the secret service is paid a salary utterly inadequate to the importance of his functions and to the admirable way in which he has performed them. I earnestly urge that it may be increased to $6,000 per annum. I also urge that the secret service be placed where it properly belongs and made a bureau in the department of justice, as the chief of the secret service has repeatedly requested; but whether this is done or not, it should be explicitly provided that the secret service can be used to detect and punish crime wherever it is found.

CONSTANT BATHS HIS MANIA.

Wealthy Plainfield Youth Spends Most of His Time Washing.

A man's curious mania for constant washing is puzzling physicians at Plainfield, N. J. The patient, who is suffering from the delusion that anything he touches soils his hands, is the son of wealthy parents.

He spends most of his time over the wash basin, cleansing his face and hands.

He is being treated by Dr. Harry V. Hubbard, who, in speaking of the case, said that he had every reason to believe that he would be able to effect a cure.

"This is the third case of the kind that has come to my attention," Dr. Hubbard said, "but it is by far the most aggravated. My patient labors under the hallucination that every object he touches soils that part of the body with which it comes in contact, and he at once rushes to the wash basin or bath tub, as the case may be.

"Not long ago his family sent for me and explained their son's mania. They told me that he had been in the bathroom 13 hours that day without leaving the room, and they had reason to believe that if he had taken one bath within that time he had bathed 30 times. Of course, this would weaken the strongest constitution on earth.

"To give you an idea how deeply rooted this mania is, it usually takes this young man from two to five hours to dress each morning. He arises and at once plunges into his bath. This complete, he sets about making his morning toilet. After picking up one piece of underwear and putting it on he at once washes his hands. The other garment is slipped on and again he washes his hands. To get on his shoes and stockings he has to wash his hands four times, and so on until the toilet is complete. He never touches an object that he does not cleanse his hands immediately thereafter.

"At times we find him deeply distressed after his bath. More often than not he complains that the towels he used were not clean, and he will set another bath and plunge in and out until he is completely exhausted."

The 500lb Club.

A curious club has been formed in New York. It is known as the "500lb Club," and its members consist of heavy-weights. The president turns the scale, it is said, at 500 pounds. The rules enact that honorary members are admitted if they weigh 450 pounds, and on attaining 500 pounds they become life members—that is, "ad vitam aut culpam," the "culpam" consisting of falling below 500 pounds. If the diminution of weight continue, the member may have to withdraw, but the 500-pounder, should he put on flesh, would be entitled to special consideration should he fall upon evil days and sink below the statutory weight, which, by the way, is about two-thirds that attained by Daniel Lambert.

Just Like a Man.

For some time they had been holding down a couple of chairs in the parlor.

"Won't you play something for me?" he asked, glancing toward the piano.

"I fear," she said deprecatingly, "my music is too poor to give you enjoyment."

"Oh, but I do enjoy it," he replied assuringly. "It doesn't take much to satisfy me in the line of music, you know."

Romance Clearly Had Little to Do with Silas' Marriage.

Preston Kendall, the actor, tells a story of a ne'er-do-well in a little New England town, where he has often spent his summers. "I was walking down the main street one day," said Kendall, "when I saw old Silas grinning from ear to ear. I hardly thought that he was that glad to see me. So, after speaking to him, I said: 'Why the smile that won't come off, Silas? What has happened to make you so happy this morning?' 'I've been agitatin' married this morning,' was the unexpected reply. 'Married! You? I exclaimed. 'Why, Silas, what on earth have you done that for? You know you can't even support yourself as it is.' 'Wall,' said Silas, 'you see, it's this way: I ken purty near support myself, an' I kind of figured out that she could finish up the job.'"

HIS IDEA OF GETTING WORK.

Kind Old Lady—Have you ever made an effort to get work?

Beggar—Yes, ma'am. Last month I got work for two members of my family, but neither of them would take it.

What It Was.

She was visiting a Chinese restaurant for the first time, and had ordered among other things an omelet. After sampling the succulent chop suey and the appetizing chow mein, she turned her attention to what seemed a dish of pancakes. Puzzling over the combination of ham, onion and other ingredients, she suddenly exclaimed to her companion: "Why, there's egg in this."

"Sure; it's the omelet," he replied.

THEN AND NOW

Complete Recovery from Coffee Ills.

"About nine years ago my daughter, from coffee drinking, was on the verge of nervous prostration," writes a Louisville lady. "She was confined for the most part to her home.

"When she attempted a trip down town she was often brought home in a cab and would be prostrated for days afterwards.

"On the advice of her physician she gave up coffee and tea, drank Postum, and ate Grape-Nuts for breakfast.

"She liked Postum from the very beginning and we soon saw improvement. To-day she is in perfect health, the mother of five children, all of whom are fond of Postum.

"She has recovered, is a member of three charity organizations and a club, holding an office in each. We give Postum and Grape-Nuts the credit for her recovery."

HUNDRED THOUSAND DIE IN AWFUL EARTHQUAKE

Seismic Shocks, Tidal Waves and Fires Devastate Messina, Reggio and Scores of Other Cities and Towns of Calabria.

Horrible Scenes in the Stricken District, Described by Eye-Witnesses--All Nations Offer Sympathy and Aid--King and Queen Go to Sicily--American Consul Arthur S. Cheney and His Wife Are Reported to Be Among the Victims of the Terrible Disaster.

ROOSEVELT'S MESSAGE.

"His Majesty Vittorio Emmanuel, Rome:

"With all my countrymen I am appalled by the dreadful calamity which has befallen your country. I offer my sincerest sympathy. American National Red Cross has issued appeals for contributions for the sufferers and notified me that they will immediately communicate with the Italian Red Cross.

"Theodore Roosevelt."

Rome.—Stunned at the magnitude of the calamity which has overtaken its fellow countrymen, all Italy mourns for the stricken province of Calabria and the island of Sicily. Accustomed for centuries to earthquakes, Italy stands ever in dread, but none was prepared for the disaster which in the fraction of a minute Monday devastated cities and towns and caused the death of thousands. Late estimatea put the number of dead at 100,000.

Messina, whose tragic history has been marked by tidal waves and war, and which was the center of Monday's terrestrial maelstrom, was shaken to ruins. Flames burst forth to complete the city's destruction and to burn alive untold numbers helplessly pinioned beneath fallen walls and broken timbers. The Strait of Messina was shaken and twisted by the earth's trembling, for mariners report the channel altered beyond recognition. The ports and villages on both the continental and Sicilian sides were wrecked or inundated and all lighthouses along the coasts were swallowed up. Navigation now is dangerous and in some places impossible.

Seaport of Reggio Wiped Out.

In the Calabrian district, which was only beginning to recover from the effects of the earthquake of 1905, Reggio was the center of the earth's upheaval. The seaport of Reggio is reported as no longer existing and the city proper is in ruins. The loss of life on both sides of the strait and in eastern Sicily was enormous.

One of the refugees from Reggio who was the first to bring the news of the city's destruction tried to make his way to Sicily in a sailboat, but was compelled to return, and finally found safely at a peninsula port. In describing his experience he said:

"The sea was strangely, mysteriously agitated, and the heavens were ablaze. Nearing Sicily, the clearing smoke revealed the mystery. Messina was in flames. In the frenzy of despair I turned my boat back to Calabria."

Terrible Scenes at Messina.

Starving, bleeding from injuries and almost insane from their terrifying experiences, Messina's survivors are fleeing in all directions. The spectacle presented by the ruined seaport is described as terrifying. Tumbling buildings both killed and mutilated, while hundreds of the injured imprisoned in the wreckage were abandoned to their fate by the fleeing populace. One of those who escaped said:

"The earth seemed suddenly to drop and then turn violently on its axis. The whole population, who practically were precipitated from the houses rent in twain, were spun around like tops as they ran through the streets. Many fell crushed to death and others, bewildered, took refuge for breath beside the tottering walls, where they soon met the fate of their companions."

Brave Work of Rescuers.

Already British and Russian squadrons have arrived at Messina. Sailors and marines have been disembarked and they have performed courageous acts in rescuing the injured and removing the wounded. A large number of survivors have been transferred to the warships, which are transformed into great floating hospitals. It is imperative that the dead be removed from the ruins in order to avoid a pestilence. Steamers with doctors, druggists, firemen and workmen have arrived at Messina from Catania and other places.

Special dispatches received here from Calabria confirm the destruction of Reggio. They report that the situation there is as bad, if not worse, than at Messina. The streets in Rome are jammed with people, who snatch the special editions from the newsboys. The people are plunged in grief and lamentations are heard on all sides. Here and there one asks another: "When will end this awful repetition of devastation and death in our country?"

All Nations Offer Aid.

The hands of all the nations have been extended to Italy in her affliction. From rulers have come messages of condolence and from the people spontaneous promises of that aid which brings the world closer together in times of great calamity. Great Britain, France and Russia have sent their warships quick as a flash of the telegraph could carry the orders to lend assistance to the stricken cities. Relief funds have already been started and a hundred ships and trains are on their way carrying supplies and re-enforcements to the south. Rome, Milan, Florence, Naples and other cities are sending physicians, police and firemen.

Described by Naval Officer.

At the time of the earthquake the torpedo boat Sappho was lying in the harbor of Messina and one of the officers told of the occurrences, as follows:

"At half-past five in the morning the sea suddenly became terribly agitated, seeming literally to pick up our boat and shake it. Other craft near-by were similarly treated and the ships looked like bits of cork bobbing about in a tempest. Almost immediately a tidal wave of huge proportions swept across the strait, mounting the coasts and carrying everything before it. Scores of ships were damaged and the Hungarian mail boat Andrassy parted her anchors and went crashing into other vessels. Messina bay was wiped out and the sea was soon covered with masses of wreckage, which was carrying calamity and ordering the saying of prayers. He asks also what money is required, as he desires to contribute funds to cope with the situation.

Premier Giolitti has appointed a national committee to organize succor for the unfortunates. The president of the organization is the duke of Aosta. The king has made a generous contribution to the relief fund. Minister of Public Works Bertolini and Minister of Justice Orlando have left Rome for Sicily. Sig. Orlando is a Sicilian.

Lasted Only Twenty-Three Seconds.

A report of technical observations from the observatory at Messina says the earthquake lasted for 23 seconds only. It was accompanied by remarkable atmospheric phenomena. The surcharged air was filled with sparks and flashes of flame which flared up until the heavens seemed afire. The crest of the earth appeared suddenly to drop. These phenomena were followed by distinct lateral oscillations that threw the panic-stricken people off their feet as they rushed to the streets.

Straits of Messina All Changed.

Reports indicate that the geography of the Straits of Messina has been so changed as to cause apprehension of serious commercial and strategic difficulties. It is believed that navigation has become extremely dangerous, in which case the fortifications on which the government in recent years spent large sums will be useless. The famous whirlpool of Charybdis, it is said, has shifted its position.

EARTHQUAKE SCENE IN ITALY.

Calabrian Family Among Ruins of T heir Home, Earthquake of Oct., 1907.

Desperate calls have been made from Rome to Messina, but these remain unanswered and fears are entertained that Fort Spuria, near Messina, has been destroyed, as the wireless station installed there is one of the most powerful in Italy and is evidently not working.

American Consul and Wife Die.

Washington. — That Arthur S. Cheney, American consul at Messina, Sicily, and his wife lost their lives in the earthquake disaster which devastated that city Monday, is indicated by an official dispatch received last night by the state department from Stuart Lupton, American vice-consul at Messina.

The following dispatch came via Malta, Maltese Islands, in the Mediterranean, being received there by wireless from Messina by Consul William H. Gale, and transmitted by him to the state department:

"The Messina consulate destroyed and consul and wife supposed to be dead.—Lupton."

Arthur S. Cheney is a native of Illinois, but was appointed consul at Messina from Connecticut August 16, 1907. Stuart Lupton, who is from Tennessee, was only recently appointed vice and deputy consul at Messina and had just arrived at his post, succeeding H. Peirce, an Italian.

King and Queen Go to Sicily.

King Victor Emmanuel and the queen, who left for the scene of the calamity, reached Naples last night and proceeded at once to Sicily. A large number of people saw their majesties depart from Rome and one among the number of deputies at the station observed to the king: "The presence of your majesty will auffice to console the stricken population."

The king turned sharply upon the speaker and said abruptly: "Don't talk nonsense."

Horrible Scenes in the Ruins.

The work of rescue at Messina, according to the meager details received here, presented harrowing scenes. Hundreds of people were pinned under walls and rafters alive, but terribly injured, for 30 hours. One of the rescuers found under the ruins of a house five children, alive, but unable to speak, clinging around the corpse of their mother. In some cases heroic rescuers met death in the falling debris. In one house 20 persons suspended on the fifth floor and unable to reach the street because the lower floors had been torn away, were rescued with a rope by a sailor. Six criminals were killed while attempting to loot the Bank of Sicily, where cash amounting to half a million dollars lay in plain view.

AFFRONT TO FOREIGN POWERS

IS YUAN'S DISMISSAL AND PROTEST IS PLANNED AGAINST CHINA BY

BRITAIN AND UNITED STATES

Opinion Is That It Will Result in International Injury—There Is Marked Lack of Unanimity Among Diplomats in the Situation.

Pekin, Jan. 4.—The dismissal from office Saturday of Yuan Shi Kai, grand councilor and commander in chief of the forces, and the appointment of Na Tung as grand councilor, an edict was issued Sunday appointing Liang-Tun-Yen, customs taotai, to the position thus made vacant on the foreign board.

The British and American ministers have reached an agreement that the dismissal of Yuan Shi Kai should not pass unnoticed. The American, British, German and Japanese ministers met again at the American legation Sunday morning, Sir John N. Jordon, the British minister, joining with Mr. Rockhill, the American minister, in submitting an outline of representations which should be made to the foreign board.

The ministers disagree on the question as to whether the welfare of foreign interests is technically involved by the regent's action, but they agree that peace is endangered.

The representatives of Great Britain, the United States and Germany view the regent's action as tantamount to an affront to the powers on account of Yuan Shi Kai's position abroad, he being recognized as a medium of fair and equitable treatment toward the nations.

The dissenting ministers are of the opinion that unless other serious events occur, interference would not be justified.

Japan concurs in the opinion that the dismissal is certain to result in international injury, but that representations to China would he difficult. There is a marked lack of unanimity among the diplomats in the present situation.

The court's action a fortnight ago in increasing the palace troops and forbidding the entrance to the palace, even of the highest officials, without passes was taken as an indication at that time of the alarm felt in court circles, and it is now believed that there was fear, also, of an anti-dynastic plot.

Sunday the government intimated its intention of making public the impeachment, giving details of Yuan Sai Kai's alleged intrigue upon which his dismissal was based.

According to reliable information the impeachment is framed on charges against Yuan Shi Kai in connection with the coup d'etat of 1898, when the regency of the dowager empress was restored and a reactionary policy inaugurated. The flight of Kang Yu Wei, the reformer, occurred at this time.

The last minister who saw Yuan Shi Kai at the foreign board on December 28 states that he was at that time suffering from no malady, but the reason given for his dismissal Saturday was that he is affected with rheumatism.

UNITED STATES ATLANTIC FLEET

Completed Two Days Ahead of Schedule Next Longest Run of Its Cruise.

Suez, Jan. 4.—The United States Atlantic battleship fleet, completing two days ahead of its schedule the next to the longest run of its world-girdling cruise, arrived here Sunday morning from Colombo, a distance of 3,440 knots, from which place the fleet sailed on December 20. The loss of a seaman from the battleship Illinois, who fell overboard and was drowned, as previously reported, was the only accident to mar the voyage from Colombo. The Illinois remained on the scene to search for the sailor and is a little behind the fleet.

The stately array of battleships was an impressive sight. The weather was splendid and the bay was crowded with craft, the occupants of which gave an enthusiastic welcome to the ships. Despite their long trip the war ships looked as smart and trim as though turned out for a naval review.

When the ships had come to anchor the Egyptian and canal authorities went aboard the flagship Connecticut and welcomed Rr. Adm. Sperry, who expressed himself as well satisfied with the cruise from Colombo. He regretted that he was compelled to curtail his stay in Egypt, but hoped that at some future time an opportunity would be given him to visit Cairo. The admiral spoke of the Australasian visit of the fleet as the special feature of the trip.

Collected $1,083.

Memphis, Tenn., Jan. 4.—At a mass meeting of Italians of Memphis Sunday $1,083 was contributed in aid of the earthquake survivors of Sicily. Committees were appointed to secure additional contributions.

'Twas Easy Picking.

Chicago, Ill., Jan. 4.—While members of the family were at dinner porch climbers entered the home of Harry B. Clow, and going through the upper rooms of the house escaped with $4,200 worth of diamonds and jewelry.

ROUND ABOUT THE STATE

What Is Going on In Different Sections of Kentucky.

CAPITAL NOTES.

FRANKFORT.

Farmers Will Be Flush.

The farmers of Franklin county will begin the new year with plenty of money. Checks for the 8 per cent reserve, held by the Burley Tobacco Society, will be sent here for distribution. Twelve car loads of 1906 tobacco, all except 25 hogsheads, were shipped from this city.

May Clean Up His Saloon on Sunday.

By dismissing the case of the city against Tom Griffy, saloonkeeper, charged with keeping open on Sunday, Judge Herndon holds that a saloonkeeper has a right to open his saloon on Sunday for the purpose of cleaning up.

To Test the Pool.

An injunction against David Waits & Sons, tobacco growers, was granted at request of the Franklin county board of control, restraining them from selling pooled tobacco. The purpose of the suit is to test the pooling law.

Wheeler Named.

Good Feeling Prevails.

Assistant Adjt. Gen. Garnett Ripley states that the best of feeling prevails among the operators and the miners at Stearns. He said there was no dispute between the miners and the management of the mining camp and mines. The only trouble was the failure of the company to recognize the union.

Falling Off in Whisky Withdrawals.

Although anti-temperance workers in Kentucky claim that the temperance movement is on the wane receipts as compared with those of last year do not show it as they fell off nearly $100,000. There was a large increase this year over last three months of last year.

Depends on Whom Governor Appoints.

Whether or not the democrats will make an effort at the next session of the legislature to repeal the law creating the state board of control depends upon whom Gov. Willson appoints January 1 to succeed Dr. Milton Board.

Fair Date Fixed.

Commissioner of Agriculture M. C. Rankin announced that the fifty-seventh annual state horticultural exhibition will be held at Lagrange January 13 and 14.

Board's Right Will Be Tested.

Miss Cordelia Gardner, of Brandenburg, Meade county, will make the first test of the new state law giving the county board the right to employ and dismiss teachers. She is alleged to have refused to adopt certain changes ordered by County Supt. Arnold.

State Inspector Thatcher has begun an investigation of the printing accounts of the state for the last eight years. State Superintendent of Printing J. W. Hedden is ill at his home, at Mt. Sterling, and not able to aid in the examination.

Governor Grants Pardon.

Gov. Willson, arch enemy of the Kentucky night rider, pardoned Jesse Underwood, aged 19, of Stanford, because of his illness. He was convicted of sending threatening letters to John Rankin and Sam J. Embry, independent growers of Lincoln county.

Pardon For Reynolds.

Gov. Willson stated that he had made up his mind to pardon Noah M. Reynolds, of Letcher county, serving a life sentence for the killing of Jas. Wright. Both Reynolds and his brother were convicted, and the brother was paroled.

Troops Are Asked For.

A telegram from Jackson, signed by County Judge Taulbee and Sheriff Combs, of Breathitt county, asked the governor to send a detachment of troops to that county. The telegram merely stated that trouble was feared, and the governor wired for more explicit reasons for sending the troops.

Banks Want Commission.

Secretary of State Bruner stated that the majority of the bankers in Kentucky will make a strong effort during the next legislature to pass a bill providing for a state banking commission.

Louisville, Ky.—A defective flue caused a fire in the colored dormitory and kitchen of the Industrial School of Reform. Although the 114 inmates awoke in a cloud of smoke, Superintendent Caldwell used the fire drill to lead every one to safety.

Owensboro, Ky.—James H. Parrish, president of the Owensboro Savings Bank and Trust Co., and T. S. Anderson, president of the Daviess County Bank and Trust Co., were indicted by the grand jury on charges of having obtained money under false pretenses.

Winchester, Ky.—Judge James M. Benton was renominated for circuit judge in the Twenty-fifth judicial district over J. Smith Hays by a majority of 2,541.

Augusta, Ky.—Mrs. M. L. Thompson, publisher of the Augusta Chronicle, died at her home here of consumption, aged 49 years. Deceased was the widow of the late J. E. Thompson.

Lexington, Ky.—Eight thoroughbred two-year-olds were purchased by Messrs. Vivian Goode, of Windsor, England, and M. H. Tichenor, of Chicago, from John E. Madden, at Hamburg Place, and will be shipped from here to New York to go to England.

Paintsville, Ky.—A shooting affray took place at Prestonburg, in which George Hunt was instantly killed and his brother Wayne seriously wounded by Grover Martin, aged 20, who fled to the hills. Young Martin is a member of one of the most prominent families in Eastern Kentucky.

Louisville, Ky.—The death of J. M. McKnight, in New York, recalls the remarkable career and experiences of the German National bank in this city. It was here that he reached the top round in financial circles, and it was here that he was sentenced in the federal court to serve a term in prison at Atlanta.

Kuttawa, Ky.—W. T. Williamson, a tobacco planter, residing near Saratoga, this county, filed a suit against the Dark Tobacco Planters' Protective association of Kentucky, Tennessee and Virginia, asking that the organization be restrained from forcing him to deliver to it 5,000 pounds of tobacco which he pooled with the association many months ago.

Louisville, Ky.—United States Internal Revenue Collector Craft refused to pay the 25 per cent raise for telephone service in internal revenue offices, and notified the company to remove all its telephones from the various offices of the revenue department, as he claims the raise makes the rates prohibitory.

Hopkinsville, Ky.—After holding several conferences, all of which resulted in failure, representatives of the Planters' Protective association and the American Tobacco Co. met here and agreed upon plans by which the Imperial is to buy a large part of the 1908 crop now controlled by the farmers' organization.

Louisville, Ky.—Better elementary educational facilities, closer communion of interests of the people of Kentucky, wider dissemination of the resources of the state, and a stronger pull together for the development of the state in every particular, was the keynote of the midwinter meeting of the Kentucky Press association held here.

Jackson, Ky.—The treatened conflict between the Callahans and Deatons, in which a street battle was imminent, was avoided by a compromise between the rival factions, by the terms of which all prosecutions for violations of the law were dismissed, whereupon the armed bands quietly left town, and this city no longer resembles an armed camp.

Lexington, Ky.—On the ground that he is no longer a resident of Kentucky C. H. Stoll, who recently announced his intention to live in New Mexico because of "the night rider" troubles, made application to the circuit court that the suit of the Lexington City National bank against him for $21,000, alleged to be due on notes, be removed to the federal courts. Judge Parker refused to entertain the motion.

Louisville, Ky.—Willis E. Smith, whose weird story, told at Owensboro, to the effect that he had been kidnaped on September 22 last while a freshman at Kentucky State university and had been drugged, starved and guarded in a cave, arrived in Louisville and admitted that it was false. He now says that he left the university because of threats to haze him.

Dayton, Ky.—A tragedy in which shotguns, pistols and knives played their terrible part occurred here, and, as a result, Harry Smith, 27, laborer, of Cincinnati, is dead; Eugene Jolly, fire marshal of Dayton, lies mortally wounded; Henry Schulte, who tried to act as peacemaker, was stabbed, and Lucy Jones, a sister of the men locked up for the killing, has a bullet in her right arm.

Elizabethtown, Ky.—Richard Eskridge, a well known farmer of Long Grove, this county, died of heart failure. He was secretary of the Hardin County Fair association and was chairman of the Hardin County Democratic Central committee. He is survived by his widow.

Louisville, Ky.—At the grave of Judge J. Wheeler McGee, the opening gates of the county workhouse swung open and 21 prisoners, shuddering by the thought of liberty, walked to freedom, as a New Year's gift.

W. G. Kite, of Waterloo, called at this office, one day last week, and left an order for some commercial printing. It was his first business trip to the county seat since he became a benedict. The stockholders of the Beaver and Big Bone Turnpike Co. held their annual meeting, last Saturday, and reelected their old board of officers.

J. D. Moore has on exhibition at his store, at Big Bone, a genuine tarrantula which he found nested in a stalk of bananas during the holidays. It is nearly as large as an ordinary mouse and an ugly looking animal.

Died, suddenly last Sunday at 2 p. m., of what was supposed to be an attack of Lagrippe, Alice Craig, 36, wife of George Craig. They resided on Aunt Sallie Cleek's farm, where they had lived for a number of years. She was a trustworthy woman and will be missed by her neighbors.

This neighborhood sustained a sad shock when the news reached here of the sudden death of Joseph Ryan, who dropped dead in the field while hunting on the 28th of Dec. near Walnut Lick. Joe was born and raised within a few hundred yards of Beaver, and had many friends here who sympathize with the bereaved family.

This is the time of year for new resolutions. I, therefore, offer the following and move its adoption provided I meet with a second. Resolved, That each and every correspondent for the paper with the Editor thrown in put forth their best efforts this year to make this one of the cleanest, newiest, most reliable

Mr. and Mrs. G. A. Slayback entertained on New Year's eve, a very large nuumber of friends. Refreshments were served consisting of nearly everything known that is pleasing to the human taste, cooked and served in such a manner that no one could refrain until all available capacity was exhausted. The guests were entertained the remainder of the evening with selections from the graphophone interminigled with an occasional selection upon the violin by Albert Roter, who, with that instrument in hand, is capable of diverting the mind of the aged back to a time when they delighted in cutting the pigeon wing.

Last Monday morning, when Will Sheets arrived at Beaver with the mail, just as he alighted from his rig the animal he was driving became frightened and jerked away from him and whirled around so suddenly Uncle Bob Conley, who was still sitting in the rig, was thrown out and ran over, luckily, however, he was not hurt. All attempts to stop the animal along the road failed until it reached the creek, a distance of two miles where Harry Jones succeeded in bringing it to a halt. Mail, laprobe, buggy seat, storm cover and numerous other articles were scattered promsciously along the road. The animal ran very fast but kept the middle of the road, doing no damage to the rig or harness.

One of the largest holiday parties in this neighborhood, was that given last Saturday night by Mrs. J. E. Gaines in honor of several of her nephews and nieces who were her holiday guests. About 50 young people were present and each vied with the other to make the occasion one of exceeding pleasure. Mrs. Gaines spared no pains in her efforts to make her young guests enjoy themselves.

This office was turned topsy-turvy several days, last week, shifting stands, racks and cases and machinery in an endeavor to assemble the unoccupied fragments of floor space that there might be room for installing a new folding machine near the beginning of the new year. "Shall The People Rule?"

What is the matter with the RECORDER? Is it in its dotage?—its mind running back into the past, resurrecting events that happened in its infancy? Does it remember conventions held in the old court house, when the tricky manipulators of nominations collected his pliable following, and by law cunning and deep chicanery, made the will of the people of no avail? Does it remember, on one occasion, when the good people of Boone county attended a convention to make battle against the trickster and his cohorts, the building was so crowded that a vote by ayes and nays was impossible? A vote by the uplifted hand was unsatisfactory because the following of the politician was ambidextrous, and well it exercised its ability. Does it remember that a division of the house was asked and granted? Tellers were stationed at the doors to record the sentiment of the people as they filed out of the building? This seemed a proper salution of the wrangle, and would have been equitable had all of the windows been locked. A number of the followers of the convention manipulators were massed near one of the back windows so his henchmen could not be seen reentering the building through this window. In this manner he formed an endless chain and controlled the convention. Who can blame the burned child from dreading the fire? Who can blame the people from objecting to a convention for nominating county or district candidates when they know from experience it does not express the will of the masses, and is only sanctioned by the politician who is afraid of a fair expression of the voters. "Shall the people rule?" We have tried the primary and are satisfied that no man in this section wishes to return to that nauseating proceeding called a convention, and the candidate who asks for a convention is but promulgating to the world his intellectual mediocricy.

Walton, Ky. A VOTER.

The general store of Quigley & Beemon, at Limaburg, on the Burlington and Florence pike, was entered by burglars, some time on Tuesday night of last week, and a lot of small articles, such as pocket cuttlery, cigars, knit jackets, were taken and an attempt was made to enter the safe in which there was about $1,000 in money. The stem in the combination dial was broken off and the dial battered considerable, the damage to the lock putting it out of commission and making it necessary to take the safe to Cincinnati to have it opened. Entrance to the store room was gained by prizing open a back window. The robbery was not discovered until Wednesday morning about 7 o'clock, when the police departments of Cincinnati and Covington were notified and asked to keep a lookout for the thieves. The guilty parties were not long out of the toils, for Wednesday night Chief Schuler of the Covington police department was told of a man who was selling pocket knives on the streets, and he went in search of him, and in a short time he had arrested Martin Farrell and his son, Albert and a Covington boy named Thomas Adams on suspicion of being the parties who did the Limaburg job. It was not long after the arrest until Adams squealed, and claimed that Farrell and his son had made him accompany them to Limaburg on two occasions, the first time no attempt being made to rob the store, only the surroundings were carefully looked over. The goods that were stolen were taken away in a suit case that belonged to Adams, and most of the articles were recovered. Mart Farrell lived for many years in the Limaburg neighborhood, and came of a good family, but has been doing badly for a long time. Deputy Sheriffs W. D. Cropper and J. F. Blyth went to Covington, Saturday, and brought the three men to Burlington and lodged them in jail. Each of the three has confessed his guilt.

has become essentially necessary in every sphere of business from the private individual to the capitalist. Every good farmer as a rule keeps an account with a bank, and it saves him many dollars, and gives him a better business standing with the public at large. No danger of money being destroyed by fire or lost by robbery when it is in a good bank. Your check given for an account is a positive receip, and a record of it is kept by the bank. The Equitable Bank and Trust Company, at Walton, Boone County, Ky., makes a study of all the public wants in the banking line, and transacts much of its business by mail. It pays interest on time deposits, and takes care of any sized account from a dollar up. Write us if you have anything in our line and we will interest you more than you can imagine.

SOLVING A RAILWAY MURDER

By George Barton

Col. James Fraser and His Wonderful Capture of a Crook

Hurried Investigation, a Trip by Night and Other Mysterious Features Are Inoculated Into Col. Fraser's System of Arriving at Identity of the Criminal Parties—Scene Is Placed in an English Station.

THE time was an evening in July, some years ago; the place the station platform of the North London Railway company at the Metropolitan borough of Hackney. A number of passengers were there, awaiting the six o'clock local from London. It arrived presently, with bell ringing clamorously and engine puffing up great clouds of smoke and sparks. The moment the train came to a full stop, a man on the platform made a rush for the nearest railway carriage. He opened the door and entered, but suddenly drew back with a look of fear on his face and a cry of horror on his lips.

The guard looked and what he saw robbed his tongue of its glibness. The setting sun sent a golden streak into the coach and the glaring light revealed there on the blue cushions a pool of red blood. The guard and the hesitating passenger entered together and made a careful examination of the carriage. The man's first sight had not deceived him. There could be no possible doubt about it. The cushions of the carriage were soaked with human blood. Inside the coach was a hat, a walking stick, and a small black leather bag.

The railway carriage was run on to its destination and a dispatch instantly flashed to Col. James Fraser, the head of the London police force. In the meantime the most persistent cross-questioning failed to throw any light whatever upon the mystery of the blood-soaked cushions. The guard remembered in a hazy sort of way that two men had entered the carriage just before the train left Fenchurch street in London. His impression was that they were together but he had no certain recollection of that. As to their appearance, he was totally at sea. He only knew that he had a crowded train that day, and in the hurry and bustle of his work paid but scant attention to individuals.

There was one clue, however, and that was of a character that could not be overlooked even in the density displayed by the railway officials. It was the impression of a blood-stained hand on the door of the railway carriage. The first act of Col. Fraser was to order the guilty carriage out of service. He directed that special pains be taken to preserve the impression of the blood-stained hand so that it could be referred to whenever the occasion demanded.

That same night word came to police headquarters that the body of a well-dressed man had been discovered at a spot where the North London railway passes Victoria park. The man was unconscious but still alive. He was taken to a nearby hospital and all that medical science could do was done to restore him to consciousness, but in vain. He died within 24 hours without saying a word. It was evident from the start that he had been murdered. Unfortunately, his head and face had been beaten so cruelly that he was unrecognizable. Just at a time when the solution of his identity seemed farthest away, the hospital authorities came upon a card in his vest pocket. It read "Thomas Briggs, Robarts & Co., Lombard street, London."

An officer was at once dispatched to the office of Robarts & Company, in Lombard street. The head of that firm said that Mr. Briggs was their chief clerk, and one of their most valued employes, and that they were at a total loss to account for his unexplained absence from his post. He had been with their banking house for nearly half a century, and during all of that time had promptly reported for work as the clock was striking nine. He failed to do so that morning and they had assumed that he was ill. Just as they were preparing to send an inquiry to his home a message was received, stating that he had not returned to his house in Hackney the night before. A hurried investigation proved that Mr. Briggs left his home at the usual hour on the previous day. He carried a gold-headed cane and wore gold-rimmed eyeglasses, and had in his possession a gold watch and chain. After concluding his business at the bank he left at the usual hour in the afternoon, and dined with his married daughter at Peckham. He returned to the city in time to take the regular train at Fenchurch street for his home at Hackney. That was the last time he was ever seen alive.

It did not take many hours to prove that the unoffending clerk of Robarts & Company and the unknown individual whose body had been found near Victoria park were one and the same person, and that the old gentleman had been brutally murdered for his money. The eyeglasses and the gold watch and chain were both missing. The blood-soaked cushions, the general disorder of the railway carriage, and the imprint of the bloody hand on the door of the vehicle proved that a terrible struggle had taken place before the foul deed was accomplished. It must have been done very quickly because the distance from Fenchurch street, from whence the train started, and Hackney was only a matter of three miles—in fact, the deed must have been committed immediately after the train left the city, for the body had been thrown into the bushes of Victoria park, and the murderer had evidently jumped from the train before it reached Hackney station.

But the days went by and there was no result. The newspapers were filled with the details of the crime and there was great public indignation. The oldest citizens of the metropolis wrote scathing letters to the London Times in which they inquired dramatically whether it was possible for a man to go on a railway journey in the heart of the British Empire without incurring the risk of being murdered. The police chafed under this criticism, but still they did not appear to make any progress. Col. Fraser sat in his office day by day and tried to solve the problem. He finally resolved that it would be necessary to trace the gold watch and chain that had been stolen from Mr. Briggs before it would be possible to get a clue to the man who had committed the murder. Every pawn-shop in or around the metropolis was visited but none of them possessed any jewelry that corresponded to that which had been stolen from the bank clerk in the railway carriage. Col. Fraser was not satisfied with these reports, and determined to personally prosecute his inquiries and researches in another direction. He selected the jewelers of London and began his work in the locality known as Cheapside.

To his delight he came upon a significant clue within 24 hours. Mr. Graves, a jeweler in Cheapside, possessed a gold chain which was identical with the one that had been owned by Mr. Briggs. The jeweler said that he had accepted the chain in exchange for another one which he had given to a foreign looking person who had called at his establishment. To add to the importance of this discovery, it was learned that the exchange of the jewelry had been made on the day following the murder of Thomas Briggs.

The news of this first link in the chain of evidence was widely published in the London newspapers. On the day following, while Col. Fraser was seated at his desk in the police headquarters, the door opened and a stranger entered the room. He was a short, stout, red-faced man, wearing a blue coat with brass buttons. The man carried a whip and from his dress and manner was evidently a cabman. He saluted in an awkward manner.

"Is this Col. Fraser?"

"It is," was the terse response.

"And may you be the chief of police?"

"That's what I am called sometimes," was the indulgent response.

"Well, my name's Bobby Smith."

"Glad to see you, Mr. Smith."

"I'm a cabman."

"An honorable vocation," responded the colonel, with a smile.

"I understand you're investigating the murder of Mr. Briggs."

At this Col. Fraser was all attention. He scanned the man's face carefully and replied:

"Yes, I am. Can you furnish me with any information on the subject?"

"I don't know," was the response, "but I have a little box here that may interest you."

Whereupon he handed Col. Fraser a jeweler's little card box bearing the name of Mr. Graves, the Cheapside jeweler. The officer looked it over and said:

"Where did you get this?"

"THAT'S THE MAN!"

"It belongs to my little girl," was the reply.

"Where did she get it?"

"It was given to her by a man who lodged with us—his name is Franz Muller. He left very suddenly after the papers had become full of the Mystery of the Railway Carriage."

This was news with a vengeance. The cabman was taken in hand and subjected to a rigorous cross-examination. He told all about his German lodger and said among other things, that the man had left his photograph on the bureau in the second-story back room where he had lodged. The police immediately secured the photograph and Col. Fraser hastened to Cheapside and presented it to Graves, the jeweler.

"Did you ever see that man?" he inquired.

"I did," was the reply. "He is the foreigner who came here and exchanged the chain on the day after the Briggs murder."

Col. Fraser returned to the cabman's home and held another long interview with the red-faced person who had so providentially furnished him with a clue.

The cabby proved to be a veritable mine of information. He testified, among other things, that he had purchased the hat which was found in the railway carriage, doing so at the request of Muller, his German boarder. It was learned that Muller had transferred his residence to a cheap lodging house in the Whitechapel district. This was carefully guarded, and Col. Fraser having supplied himself with a warrant, went there one morning to arrest the suspect. Two men were stationed in the front of the house and two in the rear, and Col. Fraser, himself, went upstairs to make the arrest. He hammered at the door. There was no response. He burst it open, and found—nothing. The room was empty. The bird had flown.

Col. Frazer realized the importance of prompt and speedy action and he at once formulated plans by which two of the shrewdest detectives in the metropolis were detailed to go to America to arrest Mr. Franz Muller. Bobby Smith, the cabman, and Mr. Graves, the jeweler of Cheapside, were sent with the officers for the purpose of identifying Muller. This curiously assorted quartet immediately went to Liverpool and took the first steamer across the Atlantic. It proved to be the "City of Manchester," which in its day was one of the fast ocean liners, but which at the present time would be ranked among the slow freighters. However, the sailing vessel in which Muller took passage was even slower, and it was calculated that the "Manchester" would reach New York some days before the "Victoria."

It was an anxious voyage, and the time was counted with feverish impatience; but the expectations of the pursuers were realized and the "Manchester" reached New York more than 48 hours ahead of the "Victoria." The four men waited on the dock, and as soon as the vessel reached the pier, they went aboard. Muller had been quite sick on the way over and he came on deck looking pale and careworn. Mr. Graves and the cabman recognized him at once and shouted in unison:

"That's the man!"

The two detectives immediately placed him under arrest and before leaving the vessel made a search of the prisoner's box. The watch belonging to the murdered man was found in his trunk, wrapped up in a piece of leather. Most audacious of all, Muller, at the time of his capture, was wearing the hat which belonged to the murdered man. It had been cut down and somewhat altered, but there was no difficulty in finding traces which made it correspond to the article of headgear which had been in the family of the victim for many years.

Through the co-operation of the American authorities, extradition papers were speedily prepared and the prisoner went back to England in the custody of his four captors, arriving there in the middle of September of the year of the murder. Although the Bertillion system of identification by means of thumb-prints had not been perfected at that time, the first steps taken by the authorities was to secure the impressions of the prisoner's hands. These were carefully compared with the blood-print on the door of the railway carriage, and the marks of the right hand were found to correspond fairly well with the blood-stained impression on the door of the coach.

The trial occurred at the next session of the general criminal court. Sir Robert Collyer, the solicitor-general, had charge of the prosecution which was based entirely upon circumstantial evidence. It was charged that Muller had committed the murder under a sudden impulse; that standing at the station he had noticed Mr. Briggs' watch and chain and jewelry, and was filled with an overwhelming desire to possess them; that on the spur of the moment he had determined to follow him into the carriage. The victim resisted, but his assailant determined to possess the valuables, no matter at what cost. He had tried to choke Mr. Briggs into insensibility, and not succeeding in that, had seized hold of a life preserver such as is carried in English railway carriages and had used it to batter in the head of his venerable victim. There was a deep wound over the ear, the skull was fractured, and there were several other blows on the head. Following up this presentation of the crime, the distinguished solicitor-general presented, piece by piece, the bits of evidence which, in his mind, convicted Franz Muller of the murder of Thomas Briggs. Sir Robert Collyer said that it was the strongest circumstantial evidence which had ever been brought forward in a murder case in his time. Muller, on his part, set up an alibi, but it was not very well substantiated, and the jury without the slightest hesitation, returned a verdict of guilty.

After his conviction Muller insisted that he had been found guilty upon a false statement of facts. His case was taken up by the Society for the Protection of Germans in England, and the most powerful influences were exerted there and abroad to obtain a reprieve for the convict. In the meantime, Muller was urged to make a confession of his crime. He evaded any direct response to this appeal, usually saying: "Why should man confess to man? Man cannot forgive man; only God can do so. Man is therefore only accountable to God." He persisted in maintaining this attitude until the very last. He was not a vicious man in any manner or way, and it was quite evident that his crime was not premeditated, and this fact at times caused some uneasiness of conscience to his captors. His refusal to admit his guilt was perplexing and disquieting.

Finally the day of execution arrived. A German pastor attended him to the scaffold and urged him to make his peace with God. The black cap was placed over his eyes, and the rope was adjusted about his neck. The executioner prepared to give the signal which would launch him into eternity. At that psychological moment Muller leaned over and whispered in the ear of his pastor:

"I did it."

The next second the drop had slipped, and Franz Muller had gone to meet his Creator.

A SURE WORD OF PROPHECY

Daniel Searches for God's Promises Concerning Israel.

BY THE "HIGHWAY AND BYWAY" PREACHER

Scripture authority—The Book of Daniel, chapter 9.

Scope and influence of Daniel's Prophecies.—The scope of Daniel's prophecies is from the downfall of the theocracy at the captivity till its final restoration, yet future—the period of the dominion of the world-powers, not set aside by Christ's first coming (John 18:36); for to have taken the earth kingdom then, would have been to take it from Satan's hands (Matt. 4:8-10), but to be superseded by his universal and everlasting kingdom at his second coming (Rev. 11, 15). Thus the general survey of the development and final destiny of the world powers (Chapters 2-7), fittingly precedes the disclosures as to the immediate future (Chapters 8-12). The book of Daniel finds its culmination in the book of Revelation, and is in fact the key which unlocks the mysteries of the latter book. The book of Daniel has exercised far greater influence on Christian theology than any other writing of the Old Testament, depicting, as it does, not merely the advent of the Messiah, but the effect and influence of his human existence upon the whole future of the human race.

SERMONETTE.

The faith of the believer is needed to make God's promises potent.

God by his prophet Jeremiah had fixed the time of the return of the Jews to Jerusalem, but it needed a Daniel to search out these promises and his faith to make the fulfillment of those promises possible.

The Bible is packed from lid to lid with God's promises, only waiting for the believer to present faith's claim and demand payment.

No draft whose claim is based upon God's promises is ever dishonored at the bank of heaven.

Daniel meant business when he went to God in prayer concerning this matter of the restoration as foretold by Jeremiah, as note the strong expressions used: "I set my face," "to seek," "fasting, and sackcloth, and ashes."

God always wants us to pray as though we were in dead earnest.

Daniel prefaced his prayer with a confession.

Old scores must be cleared up before fresh drafts can be made upon God's love and mercy.

There is a beautiful spirit manifest in Daniel's prayer. He submerges self in the interests and needs of his brethren. He takes upon himself the burden and sin of his nation and then reaches up in faith to claim the help which they needed.

Is it not true always that we must bring ourselves to a sympathetic appreciation of the needs of others and must lay our lives alongside their lives if we would lift up to God?

It is the way Christ did. It is the way we must do.

"For we do not present our supplications before thee for our righteousness, but for thy great mercies." Here is the essence of the spirit of true prayer. Daniel has reached the condition of heart which links him with God and gives him assurance of answer to his petition. God does not hear and answer prayer because of our worthiness, because of righteousness found in us, but rather because of his great mercies. Let us always seek him in that spirit.

THE STORY.

DANIEL was getting old. It came over him with overwhelming force one day as he sat in his apartments in the palace. Not that his physical frame felt the enfeebling force of his over eighty years; not that his mind was losing its grip upon the affairs of state and was no longer as keen in managing the details.

It was not that which had suddenly made him sit up and think of the long, long years he had spent in Babylon. It was now quite 69 years since the soldiers of Nebuchadnezzar had swept through the streets of Jerusalem and had carried him off with the other Jewish captives to that far off land to the east. And the years which had passed since then had been marvelous years, busy years, useful years. Luked as his life had been with that of the will of God; conscious as he had been that he was in Babylon for a purpose, and that he would there serve his nation and his God faithfully even while he served before the king who had brought ruin upon Jerusalem, he had not had time to think of the years as they passed or to be conscious that his locks were whitening and he was growing old.

No, the incident which suddenly brought him face to face with the thought of his weight of years was entirely apart from himself. It chanced that there had come into his presence that morning a young Hebrew who was engaged in some matters of state which required his consideration, and after the matters of business had been disposed of Daniel had fallen into conversation with him.— He learned that he was the son of parents who had been born in captivity, and to him Jerusalem and the land of the Jews meant little. His thought and ambition were centered in the land where he had been born, and while he was familiar with his nation's history, as Daniel discovered by questioning him, there was no desire in his heart to return to Jerusalem.

"Why, the Jews have made a place for themselves here," he had exclaimed when Daniel had expressed a hope that some day the Jews would see Jerusalem restored and the nation find a home there again.

"We are prosperous here in Babylon, and our people are united," he went on to add, "why should we want to go back?"

And when the young man had gone, Daniel had sat as one stunned.

"Could it be," he asked himself, "that the Jews were forgetting their beloved Jerusalem and were losing their desire to return thither?"

And then had come over him the realizing sense that he was growing old.

"Yes, 69 years is a long time, and here we find that a generation has grown up which never saw Jerusalem and whose love for national life there has never been kindled." And at the thought Daniel arose uneasily and began to pace back and forth. "Soon I will be gone," he exclaimed, as he ran his fingers through the abundant white locks which fell about his head. "Soon there will be none left of those who came ont of Jerusalem. And when they are gone where shall we look for those who love thy gates, O Jerusalem, and who long to return thither?"

It was almost a sob with which Daniel ended the words, but he was not one to give up to helpless, hopeless foreboding. Rather, when he became conscious of a threatening condition, did he set himself resolutely to providing for the contingency and overcoming the difficulty.

"It cannot, it must not be," he exclaimed, as he seated himself again. "Nay, there are the promises of God which speak of the return to Jerusalem. We must bestir ourselves and quicken the people with the words of the prophets. Yea, was it not brave old Jeremiah who wrote of the return?" he exclaimed, after a long silence in which he sat deep in thought.

In obedience to the inspiration, he arose and, after a search through his cabinet, he drew forth a parchment roll now yellow with age, and seating himself where the light came through the window and fell upon the scroll in his hand, he began to unroll and to read.

Hour after hour he sat there poring over the roll, eagerly searching for some word regarding the return of the Jews to Jerusalem, which he felt sure was there. The evening shadows began to gather and he bent closer over the writing, which the failing light made increasingly hard to read. And at last, when he could no longer see, he let the roll fall into his lap and gave himself up to meditation.

That which he had been reading had been the portion of Jeremiah where the prophet cried out against the iniquities of Jerusalem and warned the city of the certain judgment of God for its sin.

"Ah, Israel hath indeed sinned. Can it be that God can forget? Can it be that he has not cast off his people forever?" So the aged Daniel questioned, and then, seizing the roll again, and calling a servant to bring a light, he seated himself at his table and continued his study of the writings of Jeremiah.

"It is here, I know it is here," he exclaimed over and over to himself.

Fatigue of body and the need of sleep were forgotten in the intense eagerness to find in the roll the promise which would reassure his heart concerning his people. So passed the long hours of the night and still the aged man sat there poring over the scroll before him. The light began to break in the east and tinge the sky with rosy promise of day. And then the gray streaks of dawn began to creep into the room. Still Daniel read eagerly on and on. Suddenly a great light broke over the face of the man and he sprang to his feet, while a cry of joy hurst from his lips.

"Here it is! Here it is! Here it is!" he exclaimed over and over again. And he read aloud:

"For thus saith the Lord, that after seventy years be accomplished at Babylon I will visit you and perform my good word toward you, in causing you to return to this place. For I know the thoughts I think towards you, saith the Lord, thoughts of peace, and not of evil, to give you an expected end. Then shall ye call upon me, and ye shall go and pray unto me, and I will hearken unto you. And ye shall seek me and find me, when ye shall search for me with all your heart. And I will be found of you, saith the Lord; and I will turn away your captivity, and I will gather you from all nations, and from all the places whither I have driven you, saith the Lord; and I will bring you again into the place whence I caused you to be carried away captive."

"Seventy years?" Daniel mused, after he had finished reading. And then he fell to figuring, and the message which the figures brought to him caused him to lift his eyes in sudden exultation, as he exclaimed, fervently:

"The time is at hand. Jerusalem will yet ring with the praise of the Jews to their God, who is ever faithful, and whose promises never fail.

Two years after I went to the —— hospital and remained almost six months, but my case seemed hopeless. The urine passed involuntarily. Two months ago I began taking Doan's Kidney Pills and the improvement has been wonderful. Four boxes have done me more good than all the doctoring of seven years. I gained so much that my friends wonder at it."

WHY WELLS WAS WRATHY.

All Things Considered, He Had Some Excuse for Anger.

Charles E. Wells, who has been called the groundhog senator of West Virginia, because he once introduced a bill advocating the changing of groundhog day from February 2 to July 4, was staying over night at the Grand hotel of a budding West Virginia village not long ago.

He was awakened in the morning by heavy pounding on his door, and the voice of the old man night clerk saying "Five o'clock! Better get up or you'll miss your train."

Mr. Wells didn't intend to catch a morning train and hadn't given any instructions that he should be called at the unearthly hour of five o'clock, so he paid no attention to the old man's early morning greeting and was asleep again almost immediately.

In about 15 minutes he was again awakened by the pounding on his door and heard the voice of the old man saying apologetically: "Don't get up. I rapped on the wrong door."—Lippincott's.

Cuticura Soon Cured His Eczema.

"An itching humor covered both my hands and got up over my wrists and even up to the elbows. The itching and burning were terrible. My hands got all scaly and when I scratched, the surface would be covered with blisters and then get raw. The eczema got so bad that I could not move my thumbs without deep cracks appearing. I went to my doctor, but his medicine could only stop the itching. At night I suffered so fearfully that I could not sleep. I could not hear to touch my hands with water. This went on for three months and I was fairly worn out. At last I got the Cuticura Remedies and in a month I was cured. Walter H. Cox, 16 Somerset St., Boston, Mass., Sept. 25, 1908."

KNEW THE PIG'S WEAK POINT.

Youngster Was Confidant of His Ability to "Stump" Him.

It is an interesting fact that the two studies of arithmetic and geography seem to be diametrically opposed to each other in the affections of school children. Pupils who are particularly proficient in one are apt to be backward in the other. A story is told of a little boy who was slow in arithmetic, and whose apparent stupidity in this field was a great source of grief to his father, who had been a mathematician.

One day, when the father and son were walking out, they passed a place where a "learned pig" was on exhibition, and the father took the boy to see this porcine prodigy.

"Just look at that," said the father. "Why, there's a pig that can count and add up numbers! Don't you wish you were as smart as he?"

"Ha!" answered the boy. "Just let me ask him a few questions in geography!"—Ideas.

LAME BACK PRESCRIPTION

The increased use of "Toris" for lame back and rheumatism is causing considerable discussion among the medical fraternity. It is an almost infallible cure when mixed with certain other ingredients and taken properly. The following formula is effective: "To one-half pint of good whiskey add one ounce of Toris Compound and one ounce Syrup Sarsaparilla Compound. Take in tablespoonful doses before each meal and before retiring."

Toris compouud is a product of the laboratories of the Globe Pharmaceutical Co., Chicago, but it as well as the other ingredients can he had from any good druggist.

"I'm waiting," replied the robin, "for one of these daffy little airship chappies to blow along and then meby I can sneak a ride."

As further inducement to settlement of the wheat-raising lands of Western Canada, the Canadian Government has increased the area that may be taken by a homesteader to 320 acres—160 free and 160 to be purchased at $3.00 per acre. These lands are in the grain-raising area, where mixed farming is also carried on with unqualified success. A railway will shortly be built to Hudson Bay, bringing the world's markets a thousand miles nearer these wheat-fields, where schools and churches are convenient, climate excellent, railways close to all settlements, and local markets good.

Tuesday evening, December 29th, the hospitable home of Mr. and Mrs. J. C. Byland, of North Walton, was the scene of one of the most enjoyable social events of the season, the occasion being in honor of their daughter, Miss Scena's birthday. Games and other amusements were enjoyed until a late hour, after which delightful refreshments were served. There were about 40 guests in attendance and all had a "scrumptious" time.

Miss Louise Green entertained quite a number of her young friends, New Years eve, with a "watch party" at the beautiful country home of her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Robert C. Green, in Kenton county. The evening was most delightfully spent together, and was made the more so by the charming hostess, who in every way contributed to the happiness of her guests. Refreshments in three courses were served, and with happy hearts and smiling faces the jolly party bid good-bye to 1908 and cheerfully welcomed in 1909. There were about twenty couple present.

The marriage of Rev. J. B. Harris and Miss Mary B. Rouse, was beautifully celebrated at Walton Methodist church, Wednesday evening, Dec. 30th, at 8 o'clock, the auditorium being filled to overflowing with personal friends of the high contracting parties. The church was beautifully decorated with flowers and evergreens. At the appointed the strains of the beutiful wedding march from Lohengrin, the bridal party entered the church, Misses Harris, two sisters of the groom, leading, followed by Miss Julia Alden, of Ft. Thomas, as bridesmaid, and then the handsome and happy young couple, whose lives were blended into one in the impressive and beautiftl cermony performed by the groom's father, Rev. J. W. Harris, of Flat Rock, Pulaski county. It was a most happy affair, and the smile of approval was everywhere. Following the ceremony the happy couple repaired to the home of the brides parents, Mr. and Mrs. W. R. Rouse, where a joyous reception was tendered them, many friends calling to extend congratulations and best wishes. Rev. Harris is the popular pastor of Walton Methodist church, and his bride is one of the most lovable ladies in Walton. The best wishes of all are tendered them for a long, happy, and prosperous future. The ushers at the church were Chas. Ransler, Roy Stamler, Earl Rouse and Robert Coffman.

Our people were greatly shocked Sunday night by the sudden death of one of our dearly beloved ladies, Mrs. A. W. Smith, who passed to her heavenly reward at about 8 o'clock. Mrs. Smith had been ill but nothing serious was thought of it as she had been about that day, but when her condition suddenly become worse, and the symptons alarming, the best physicians were called to her bedside, and they at once pronounced her case hopeless as peritonitis had set up, and it was only a short time before Death set its seal on her mortal frame, and it was with gre t anguish that her husband and three children, who idolized her, saw the light of life fade from her eyes. Mrs. Smith was one of the best of wives and mothers, and her life was a sacrifice to her family to whom she devoted her life and exemplified in many ways the affection that a mother alone can shower on a household. Mrs. Smith was beloved by everybody for her many lovable, womanly characteristics. Generous and kind to a fault, charitable in everything, and with a pleasant word and a smile for all she spread sunshine along her pathway through life to the happiness of all. Mrs. Lutie M. Smith was born near Florence, this county, April 12th, 1861, and was a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Milton Scott, both deceased, and she spent nearly all of her useful life in this county, where she numbered an extensive acquaintance, all of whom were pleased to be classed as her friend. On April 26th, 1876, she was united in marriage to A. W. Smith, the ceremony taking place at Burlington. Her husband and three children survive her and sorrow over the loss of their best friend. The children are Scott Smith, Mrs. Berry Noell and Howard Smith, all residents of this locality. The funeral will take place today (Wednesday) from the Walton Baptist church, of which the deceased had been a devoted member of many years standing, Rev. J. Andrews, her pastor, conducting the services. Interment at Florncee.

This office was completely "snowed under" with communications this week. Everything was handled that it was possible.

Detection of Chinky

By George F. Butler and Herbert Ilsley

Dr. Furnivall Solves a Perplexing Case by the Use of His Psychometric-Deductive Powers

AT 5:30 in the morning a laborer with two cents for his breakfast milk warm in his hand stopped in front of Swartz' provision store and stared blankly at the closed door and shutters. The place was always open at five at this time of year, and he was in a hurry.

The stillness was broken by the policeman. Drawing his revolver he tapped with it lightly on the glass, calling in a loud voice:

"Hi, there! You in there! I see you. Hoid up your hands and come on out o' that! Come out, I say!"

"Well, well, well! 'Tis poor old Swartz—he's hung himself!" the policeman whispered in awe. Then he remembered that the door of the shop, fastened on the outside, was secured by means of a bar and padlock. These must have been put in place by somebody with Swartz in the shop! Then who could that somebody be if not—the murderer! Yes, it was not suicide, it was murder, and if murder, who could the murderer be but Flannigan, the only person besides Swartz possessing a key to the padlock?

With the flash of this obvious sequence into his mind, the policeman hurried to the store telephone and called up his station, notifying it that Swartz was murdered, that Flannigan a clerk, had done the deed and was missing.

From the evidence not a man of the force present entertained the slightest doubt of how the crime had occurred, nor who the criminal logically must be. Flannigan, just before closing-time on Saturday night when, trade being over and the shop deserted, the street door was closed and the shutters put on all but the back window, had for some reason throttled his boss with his powerful hands, slipped the rope around his neck and hoisted him up there to make it appear to be a case of suicide, locked up and fled. Flannigan was thick-witted, and it would never occur to him that he had left all the signs pointing to himself, and only to himself. As long as nobody had seen him do it he would feel safe; for he was one of those people who are continually repeating for the information of their audiences that "what you don't see you don't know."

Officers were at once dispatched in several directions for the man. The fact that he was not at his boarding house, but must have returned to his room from the shop and changed his clothes at some time between six o'clock on Saturday evening and eight on Sunday morning, was precisely the evidence that the police looked to find there, and they found it. Flannigan's lodging mistress said that on going to his room to put it in order on Sunday morning at eight, the usual time, she saw that the bed had not been slept in, and examination showed that his every-day clothes hung in the closet while his best suit was missing from its accustomed hooks. And he had not been seen in the vicinity since Saturday morning, when he left the house for his day's work. To this information the police, making a search of his room on their own account, added certain other suggestive items. A badly soiled shirt, torn up the back as if discarded in a hurry, was crowded behind the bureau; a razor, unwiped after using, and a shaving paper with dried lather on it, as if the shaver was in such haste that he could not stop to clean away the traces of his work, were on a little table near the gas jet; a traveling bag, which the lodging mistress asserted that he owned, was not to be found; there was no linen in the bureau drawers. In fact, all the evidence tended to show that the man had left suddenly for parts unknown, saying nothing to anybody of his intended absence, taking with him what few valuable effects he possessed. If the razor remained behind it was because in his excitement he had forgotten it.

Inquiry in the neighborhood soon brought to light a man who had seen Flannigan late Saturday night with a suit case and a big roll of bills staggering from one saloon to another on the way down to the south station; and it presently being learned that Flannigan had relatives in the little country town of Fairview, which was his native place, the rest was easy. He was just the type of man who, having committed a crime, would immediately make for the vicinity of his old home, having neither sense nor general information enough to steer as widely away from that particular spot as possible. Connections were made by telephone with the police of Fairview, and within two hours from that time Flannigan was undergoing examination at station five.

He was a very muscular fellow of 27 years, with a face full of good-natured imbecility. It seemed evident at once to the examining officers that the man would know no better than to commit murder, and would commit it under provocation, the last thing to enter his thick head being the fact that he, with his grade of intelligence, would not have one chance in a thousand of escaping the penalty. He asserted his innocence of the charge, but in a half-hearted manner, as if he was very far from realizing the seriousness of his position. He said:

"If old Swartz is dead, I'm sorry. I didn't do it. He always treated me all right, and I wouldn't do him dirt. If I knew who did I'd lick him good."

"What did you go away from your room for without telling anybody of it?"

"Shucks! I didn't have no time. It was most 11 Saturday night when I knowed it first myself. The boss, he says: 'Flanny,' he says, 'how'd you like a vacation?' he says. 'Everybody but you and me is taking a vacation,' he says; 'it's the fashion nowadays,' he says. 'You go to-night, Flanny,' he says, 'and I'll go when you git back. You can stay a week,' he says, 'and here's two weeks' wages. That will do you,' he says. Then he counted out $26 dollars from the big roll he had in the safe—"

"So he had a big roll in the safe, did he?" the captain interrupted.

"Sure! He had just put it in there—$248. He says: 'Flanny, this is the biggest day we ever had, and I'm a-going,' he says, 'to give you a vacation, 'because,' he says, 'Flanny, you're all right, and we can afford to be in the fashion,' he says."

"Well, what did you do then?"

"I says if I'm going I'd go then, so's to git the 11:45 train and be home Sunday all day. So he says go ahead, and I goes—"

"You went to your room before taking the train?"

"For sure! I had to git my glad rags. And I started to shave, but didn't. I didn't have time."

"You had time to drop into a number of places on the way down to the station, didn't you?"

Flannigan grinned slyly.

"I wouldn't if I'd shaved," he answered.

That ended the examination as far as it need be given here. Swartz was found hanged in his store, to which only he and Flannigan had a key, Swartz' key was in his pocket, Flannigan's key was in his pocket, and the store was locked from the outside. Flannigan had run away, and when caught had told a cock-and-bull story of a vacation, a luxury never heard of before in connection with any employe of "Fatty" Swartz, or even with Swartz himself, who had been for 13 years in that store every day of his life except Sundays, and all day. The notion that he should suddenly propose such a thing to Flannigan at 11 o'clock at night, make him a present of a week's pay and pack him off at once, was preposterous—just the kind of a foolish story that a man of Flannigan's caliber would be likely to invent. Only one thing seemed strange to the police: What had Flannigan done with the $248?

The next day after Flannigan had been committed for trial without bail a little old woman with beady black eyes, a wrinkled, yellow skin, a highly nervous manner and a very shrill voice called on Dr. Furnivall, and announcing that she was Flannigan's mother said that her son was of course innocent, and as she had no money to pay a high-up lawyer and detective to prove it, she had come to him as the only thing left for her to do.

Dr. Furnivall was given access to Flannigan's cell. He commanded:

"Flannigan, carry your mind back to 11 o'clock Saturday night, and tell me what happened to you then?"

"Why," he answered without hesitation, "the boss wag giving me 26 plunks to go on a vacation with."

"Did you leave the store then?"

"I left as soon as I put the shutters up to the front windows. The old man said he'd fix the back one."

"Was he in the store when you left?"

"Yes, sir."

"Alone?"

"Yes, sir."

"When you went out at the door where did you go?"

"To Tim Foley's place first, and then to Randall's, and then to my room."

"Did you talk with anybody in those places?"

Only the barkeeps. They was hardly anybody around then. It was closing time for those shops. They ain't victuallers."

"Did you see anybody at your lodging house?"

"No. The lights was out and I went in quiet. Everybody was abed."

"When you came out where did you go?"

"I took a car for the south station."

"Did you talk with anybody on the car?"

"I can't think. I don't think so."

"You don't think? Can't you say positively? What you had taken at Foley's and Randall's hadn't begun to affect you, had it?"

"Well, I h'isted it in quick, and a lot of it, and my head was going some, all right."

Up to this moment Flannigan had been talking in a normal manner. The doctor's gaze had put his face through the preparatory stages of change only. But now, from a startled, then earnest, passing to a peaceful and contented, expression, his eyes leaped to that of absorbed thought, and he continued in a monotonous voice:

"I think somebody was there; somebody I didn't know very well. I think I spoke to him. But I don't remember if he said anything to me. It was an open car, and I guess he was way over on one end of the seat and I was on the other."

"Was he on your right or your left side?"

"I don't know. Seems to me he was sort of behind me. I'm pretty sure I didn't see him. I sort of felt him, I guess, and I asked him—"

He hesitated, a strange, intent, introspective look in his blue eyes.

"Asked him?" suggested Dr. Furnivall, softly.

"Asked—him—what—time—it—was" He proceeded thus hesitatingly, groping in his mind for the clew to the impression faintly traced there. Then suddenly he went on in full confidence: "No, I asked him if we had time before the 11:45 train to drop in somewhere for a little taste."

"What did he say?"

"He asked me where I was going, and I told him to Fairview on my vacation, and I mustn't miss the train."

"What did he say then?"

"He said there was plenty of time. So we got off and walked through Arch street to Heulzer's, but he wouldn't go in. He said he'd wait outside."

"But you went in?"

"Yes."

"Was he waiting when you came out?"

"No. I guess I stayed too long. I missed the train and had to go home on a freight."

"You say you didn't know the man very well, but can't you remember anything about him, any peculiarity about him?"

"Well, he had a funny smell."

"A funny smell. What was it like?"

"It was kinder sweet. He said he'd been eating something for his breath. He gave me some, too. He said I ought to have some by me, it was so good for a whisky breath."

"Have you any of it with you?"

"Yes, in my vest pocket."

The doctor searched the pocket and presently found a kernel of a well-known proprietary article for the breath. He chewed it a moment and then leaning toward the man so that the scent must strongly reach his nostrils, said:

"Do you remember that smell?"

"Sure I do."

"What is associated with it in your mind? What does it remind you of?"

"Heuizer's hotel."

"Did you ever smell it before you were in that place?"

"Why, yes; that is what Chinky gave me just before I went in—"

"Chinky? Who is Chinky?"

"I dunno. He's a feller I met sometimes. I dunno his last name."

"Why is he called 'Chinky?'"

"They say it's because when he runs to turn the switch the dimes and nickels chink in his pocket."

"Then he must be a conductor on the street cars?"

"Oh, yes; that's what he is! I remember now."

Dr. Furnivall returned to the office. The captain had just returned with the information that, sure enough, the key did not fit the lock on Swartz' store.

"Of course," said Dr. Furnivall. "Now hunt up a man—a conductor on the street cars, who is known as 'Chinky.' He is your man. Bring him to me and I'll prove it."

But "Chinky," who was found to be a conductor by the name of Alan Westover, frightened so that he could not stand on his feet when charged with the crime, admitted his guilt at once, and there was no necessity for hypnotizing him. He said that Saturday night after his work he had met Flannigan on a car. He told him he was going on a vacation, that Swartz was in the store with a big roll, which he was intending to take home with him, as the safe was no good, and that he (Flannigan) had brought away the store key instead of leaving it with the boss, as he ought to have done, seeing that he was to be away so long and might lose it. Flannigan was stupid, and "Chinky" easily got the key from his pocket as he helped him from the car to go to Heulzer's, substituting one of his own in its place. Running to the store he watched until he saw Swartz removing his butcher's frock, and while it was over his head, entangling his arms, he rushed in and choked him with a short length of rope. He meant only to render him unconscious and get the money, his hastily conceived plan being to throw suspicion on Flannigan, who would seem to have run away after doing the job; and that was why he had stolen the key. But when he saw that he had overdone the matter—that Swartz was dead—the pulley and rope dangling down from the loft gave him the idea of complicating the affair by making it look like suicide. So he hoisted the body up and left it hanging, shut the door, put up the bar, locked the padlock and went home. He had suffered the most horrible tortures of mind ever since; had been on the point of giving himself up a dozen times, feeling that death would be a relief to him, and now that he was taken he was glad of it. They would put him out of all his misery before long. His only excuse for the crime was that he was a cocaine fiend, and supposed he was crazy and didn't know any better.

Flannigan, released at once, went home for his vacation, this time without stopping on the way; and he never entered a saloon afterward. Westover was electrocuted, after a long trial instituted by a benevolent society in the attempt to prove him insane.

A Slight Misunderstanding.

Little Helen Bentley of Los Angeles, aged five, dearly loves her grandma, who has been living with her and her parents. Recently grandma went to Seattle for a visit, and caught cold on the way. When she arrived there, she wrote back to Helen's parents that she had reached Seattle, but had had a hard fight with the grip. Helen wanted to hear what grandma had to say, and the letter was read to her. Soon afterward she saw one of her neighbors, and exclaimed: "Oh, Mrs. Smith, we've had a letter from grandma. She got to Seattle all right, but she had a terrible fight with her valise."

Editorial Verdict.

From a serious-minded jester the editor received this note, together with a consignment of humor that was heavy enough to go by freight:

"Dear Sir: I read all these jokes to my wife, and she laughed heartily. Now, I have it on good authority that when a man's wife will laugh at his jokes they are bound to be very good —or she is. Yours, etc."

The editor slipped them into the return envelope with the letter, after writing on the margin: "She is."

"Well, then, turn the plate around," was the answer.—Dellneator.

JOY WORK

And the Other Kind.

Did you ever stand on a prominent corner at an early morning hour and watch the throngs of people on their way to work? Noting the number who were forcing themselves along because it meant their daily bread, and the others cheerfully and eagerly pursuing their way because of love of their work.

It is a fact that one's food has much to do with it. As an example:

If an engine has poor oil, or a boiler is fired with poor coal, a bad result is certain, isn't it?

Treating your stomach right is the keystone that sustains the arch of health's temple and you will find "Grape-Nuts" as a daily food is the most nourishing and beneficial you can use.

We have thousands of testimonials, real genuine little heart throbs, from people who simply tried Grape-Nuts out of curiosity—as a last resort—with the result that prompted the testimonial.

If you have never tried Grape-Nuts it's worth while to give it a fair impartial trial. Remember there are millions eating Grape-Nuts every day—they know, and we know if you will use Grape-Nuts every morning your work is more likely to be joy-work, because you can keep well, and with the brain well nourished work is a joy. ESTHER THE QUEEN

BY THE "HIGHWAY AND BYWAY" PREACHER

(Copyright, 1908, by the Author, W. B. Ellison.)

Scripture Authority—The Book of Esther.

Historical Facts of the Book.—The purpose of the book is to relate an episode in the history of those Israelites who did not return from captivity, and it shows their moral decline. Having chosen to remain in a heathen land, Mordecai and his family accommodate themselves to their adopted nationality till their lives are imperiled. His kinswoman, Esther, being constrained to compete for a position in the harem of a heathen monarch, Mordecai charges her to conceal her nationality and religion for temporal aggrandizement. Although God's providence never forsakes his people, and in answer to their prayers deliverance is wrought, his name remains secret among them. The contrast throughout between the tone of Mordecai and Daniel under similar circumstances, and the inferiority of the former to his contemporaries Ezra and Nehemiah, are very marked. The incidents of the book are supposed to have their historical position between the sixth and the seventh chapters of Ezra, and Ahasueras is conjectured to have been Artaxerxes; though some see in him a stronger resemblance to the effeminate Xerxes, and place the events which this book records in the later years of his reign.

SERMONETTE.

"And the king loved Esther above all the woman . . . and made her queen instead of Vashti."—King Ahasuerus presents a striking paradox. He puts away his queen because her womanly modesty and virtue would not permit her to yield to the degrading demands of her drunken lord, and he choses a queen because these very qualities provide the exquisite setting for her beauties of face and form.

The truest beauty is that which pertains to heart and life rather than to the mere physical.

Beauty which is only skin deep may please for the moment, but it has nothing upon which real friendship and real love can rest.

There is a suggestion in the first verse of the second chapter that King Ahasuerus was filled with poignant regret over his hasty and ill-advised decree banishing his noble queen Vashti from the palace. However much man in his baser moments is willing to drag woman down to low moral levels, this fact remains that manhood everywhere has true admiration for womanly virtues, and it is this one strong influence of pure-minded noble-hearted women which keeps human life trending upward.

We want to note another thing in regard to the character of Esther. Her fortune did not prove her misfortune. Her exaltation in position in life did not debase or stifle the finer qualities of the inner heart and life. In other words, her prosperity did not spoil her. Her heart beat true and her head could not be turned by the glamor and pleasures of the palace life.

True womanhood is always proof against the allurements of the world's riches and pleasures. It is just here that many a woman falls and shows how little depth of character she possessed.

One other point we wish to make concerning the qualities of this truly great, this beautiful, womanly woman, and that is her faithfulness to her friend and protector, Mordecai, for it is said: "Esther did the commandment of Mordecai, like as when she was brought up with him." How many young women to-day have such appreciation and respect for the advice of parents that they continue to obey even after they have left the home nest to make homes of their own?

THE STORY.

"AND thou, Esther, I do declare as my queen!"

How sweet is a signal triumph to a woman's heart, and how the words thrilled through the heart of the beautiful young woman as she knelt before King Ahasuerus and graciously bowed her head to receive the royal diadem of purple ribbon, striped with white, which the jeweled hand of the king proceeded to bind about her forehead, and which was the insignia of her exalted station in life.

The splendid ceremonies over at last, the beautiful queen retired to her apartments. As she sank upon one of the soft divans a sigh of delighted satisfaction escaped from her lips. What a beautiful place it was. How luxurious! As she turned to take in the full sweep of the apartment, its rich hangings, its exquisite carvings in ivory, its ornaments of gold and silver, and the flash of precious stones as they caught the light and sent it back in myriad vari-colored gleams, her hand slipped from the fragrant folds of her royal robes and rested on the covering of the couch on which she was reclining. Instantly her delicate touch detected the exquisitely fine texture of the covering and she began to stroke her hands back and forth over its soft, velvety surface, while she gave herself up to delightful dreaming.

"It is all mine," she said half aloud. Her voice must have sounded louder than she had intended, for her maid in waiting heard her speak and instantly came in, bowing low and asking her what she desired.

"I did not call," Queen Esther said, with gracious, kindly smile, "but now that thou art here, tell me, were these the apartments of Queen Vashti? And are these the same beautiful furnishings which she enjoyed?"

"The apartments are the same, your highness, but the furnishings are the latest and finest which could be found by search through all the vast realm."

"King Ahasuerus is good," said Queen Esther, in soft, appreciative tones.

"Yes, he is, save when in his cups. He has never ceased to mourn for the beautiful Vashti. She was, oh, so good."

"And I shall try to be good, too," spoke up Queen Esther, in earnest tone, "and you will help me, won't you?" she added, with a winsome appeal in her voice.

The maid was completely won by the sweet candor of the new queen and gave ready assent, and in the days which followed she gave ample evidence of a sincere loyalty. And it was well for Queen Esther that she had a real friend in the midst of all that intrigue and plotting which marked the life of the great palace of Shushan.

The days came and went. Esther, in obedience to the command of Mordecai, had kept the secret of her nationality, and of her connection with him. It had been a long time since she had had word from her cousin, and a voice whispered within that now, as queen and removed so far from him, it would be well for her to obliterate all traces of connection with him. How easy to cut loose absolutely from him. To receive no communication from him and to send no word to him. When that voice whispered such suggestion to Queen Esther she scarce listened to it at all at first, but as the days passed she found the voice repeating the suggestion, and she in turn arguing with herself as to the feasibility of obeying. It was a struggle between the loyal impulses of the heart towards the friend of the old and lowly life and the haughty pride of the heart which finds birth in the new life of an exalted station. It is such a struggle as that which comes to one always who, having attained great and exalted station in life, finds the questions arising as to just where the former friends are going to fit into the new life. But true womanhood asserted itself finally in the case of Esther, as it will in any heart which rings true and genuine, and, calling her maid to her, she questioned her as to whom she could trust in taking messages outside the palace walls, for said she: "I have a very dear friend, one to whom I owe everything, to whom I desire to secretly send word and find out how he does."

"Hatach, one of the king's chamberlains, is such a man," confidently replied the maid. "But I fear Bigthana and Teresh. They have not ceased to grieve for the Queen Vashti, and would do thee and the king hurt had they the chance."

"Who are these men? Are they the ones who have been so solicitous in keeping guard over the wing to the palace in which are my apartments?"

"The same, your highness."

"And why think you that Hatach can be trusted?" questioned the queen.

"Because he is of a race different from Bigthana and Teresh, a race called the Jews, many of whom still remain in this land, notwithstanding that years ago permission was given to them to return to their own land."

Queen Esther started visibly, but quickly recovering herself, for she was surprised and delighted to learn that Hatach was of her own nation, she said, calmly:

"It is enough. Send Hatach thither, but let not Bigthana or Teresh know what thou doeth."

So it came to pass that Queen Esther found another friend in the person of Hatach, a eunuch, and one of the king's chamberlains over the royal harem. He it was who proved a trusty messenger between Esther and Mordecai. He it was who, at the suggestion of Esther, warned Mordecai of Bigthana and Teresh, and he it was who later brought word to Queen Esther from Mordecai of the plot of these two men, and which was communicated to the king, who speedily had them hanged to a tree.

It was at this time that the king was pleased to advance Haman in the affairs of the kingdom and make him chief over all the princes of the realm, a thing which troubled Mordecai, the keeper of the king's gate, for with his advancement Haman had assumed the kingly prerogatives and demanded that the people everywhere whom he met should bow in adoration and worship, a thing which a Jew could not do, for worship was due alone to God.

This aroused the bitter enmity of Haman and he sought how he might destroy Mordecai. Now Mordecai knew of the hatred which Haman had for him and expected that almost any time the assassin's knife might end his life, but he told none of these things to Queen Esther, for he was loth to cause her anxiety on his behalf. So matters stood until one day word was brought to Esther that Mordecai stood without the king's gate clothed in sackcloth and ashes. Then was Queen Esther troubled, and she sent other raiment to Mordecai, saying:

"Weep not! Whatever thy trouble, I will help the."

RHEUMATISM PRESCRIPTION

The increased use of "Toris" for rheumatism is causing considerable discussion among the medical fraternity. It is an almost infallible cure when mixed with certain other ingredients and taken properly. The following formula is effective: "To one-half pint of good whiskey add one ounce of Toris Compound and one ounce of Syrup Sarsaparilla Compound. Take in tablespoonful doses before each meal and before retiring."

Toris compound is a product of the laboratories of the Globe Pharmaceutical Co., Chicago, but it as well as the other ingredients can be had from any good druggist.

Delicate Scientific Instruments.

The human heart sense can not realize a difference of temperature beyond one-fifth of a degree; but the thermometer, an instrument 200,000 times as sensitive as the skin, notes a difference of a millionth of a degree. A galvanometer flexes its finger at a current generated by simply deforming a drop of mercury so as to press it out of a spherical shape into that of an egg.

Strong drug cathartics simply aggravate the condition—the true remedy for constipation and liver trouble is found in Garfield Tea, the mild Herb laxative.

Politics is coming to the front again in Kentucky on Democratic candidates for State offices are being groomed in every direction, while the United States Senatorship is receiving attention. Paynter and James will be the entries, with those who supplanted Blackburn with Paynter, largely lined up for James.

In this issue appears the annual statement of the Farmers' Mutual Fire Insurance Company of Boone County. It is an elaborate document, replete with interesting information for the policy holders. It was made up by the secretary, Mr. Malchus Souther, without the suggestions of a blank form, and is a testimonial of his ability as an accountant. Examine the report and you will acquire considerable information regarding the local insurance company.

The engineers of the Cincinnati Southern Road have under discussion the construction of an immense re-enforced concrete bridge to take the place of the present High Bridge, which spans the Kentucky river. Plans have been drawn for a steel arch structure to cost in the neighborhood of $1,250,000, the engineers have an idea that the great solidity of the walls of the chasm will make it possible to build a concrete structure which will stand for all time. The difference in the cost of such a structure is more than made up by its lasting qualities, it is said. If the concrete form is adopted it will be the largest concrete arch bridge in the world.

The Carrollton News wants the Democratic nominations for Circuit Judge and Commonwealth's Attorney made during the next few months. It says: "What is the objection to nominating Democratic candidates for Circuit Judge and Commonwealth Attorney during the next two months? People are not busy now and they will attend the election. This promises to be the busiest year we ever had in this District and the people will not want to be bothered with candidates and attending an election when the weather gets good and cropping time begins. The committee should be called together and select the time and manner of making the nominations, as 75 per cent. of the nominations have already been made in this State. We see no reason why they should not be made in this District."

In regard to the selection of the Democratic nominees for the offices of Circuit Judge and Commonwealth's Attorney in this Judicial District the voters appear to be considering no other plan than a primary election for making these nominations, although there is abroad in the district the charge that the friends of some of those who will strive for one or the other of these nominations are endeavoring to have the committee call a delegate convention, hoping to be able to manipulate it in the interest of their favorites, just the trick which has placed Kentucky in the doubtful column politically, and the trick which the rank and file of the Democratic party has determined to wipe out if to do so it requires so heroic a remedy as delivering the State over to the Republican party. Those who elect officials have concluded that they are entitled to a voice in the selection of the nominees, of which they consider themselve deprived in a delegate convention, and they stand for a primary election as against a boss-ridden convention. Conventions have become so distasteful in the last few years that those to whom the party management has been entrusted for the State took cognizance of the fact and called a primary election to nominate a candidate for U. S. Senator and a full ticket of State officers; but the most striking example of how the voters regard conventions and primary elections is that furnished by this, the Sixth Congressional District. When Congressman Rhinock was a candidate for a second nomination it was handed to him by a convention, in the selection of delegates to which a very small percent of the Democratic voters in the district took part, as they believed those in control in the party had placed the nomination in advance, and that the district convention was merely a formality At the regular election in November the nominee barely pulled through, so great was the dissatisfaction in the party. How different the result following the Congressional primary election held last August. It was considered absolutely fair, Congressman Rhinock being nominated for a third election, and at the November election, instead of a measly majority of two hundred or three hundred the district gave him one of its old time majorities, over six thousand. These two elections show what the Democrats wont do if dissatisfied with the manner in which a nomination is obtained, and what they will do when they have been given a square deal in making a nomination. When a primary election is properly conducted there is no excuse for a slump at the regular election, and in fair primaries lies the Democratic party's only hope for ascendency in Kentucky.

The Union Tobacco Society was organized at Louisville, last Thursday, by representative tobacco men connected with the tobacco societies in Kentucky, Indiana and Wisconsin. The officers are, M. O. Hughes, of Bowling Green, president, and J. E. Doss, of Greenville, secretary. Affiliated with the society are the Burley Society, of Kentucky; Southern Indiana Tobacco Society; the New Grand River Tobacco Association; the old Green River Tobacco Association; Planters' Protective Association in the Farmers' Educational and Cooperative Union, of Hart county. The purpose of the Union Tobacco Society is to control the tobacco crops raised in Kentucky, Indiana and Wisconsin. The societies affiliated with the new organization will make an effort to get all the growers in so that no sale can be made except through the headquarters of the society. If the society is successful no tobacco manufacturer in the country, independent or otherwise, will be able to purchase Kentucky, Indiana or Wisconsin tobacco without dealing with the executive board. Prices will not fluctuate, but will be fixed by the executive board of the Union Society in accordance with the different grades when the crops are in, and the buyer must pay the price or go without the tobacco. This is a very formidable organization, and the manufacturers will have to set up and take notice.

Progress In Rural Free Delivery.

According to the annual report just issued by Mr. P. V. McGraw, Fourth Assistant Postmaster General in charge of the free rural delivery, the monotony of life in 3,900,000 farmers' homes is broken daily by the passing of the rural carrier. Thirty nine thousand one hundred and forty-three drivers whose salary averages $867 leave daily in the iron boxes in front of the farmers' homes their mail. The establishment of new routes during the past year has made possible the discontinuing of 1,958 country postoffices. According to the report the introduction of the rural system has stimulated an interest in country road improvement, as there has been expended in this direction, since the establishment of rural routes, the sum of $70,000,000.

CHAS. W. ROBINSON,

Who Escaped from Burlington Jail and was Recaptured in Chicago One Day Last Week.

Taken to Covington Jail for Safe Keeping.

Charlie Robinson says the night he escaped from jail in Burlington, that he dodged behind Atty. G. G. Hughes office across the street from the jail, where he remained for about half an hour. That he was there or somewhere else near the jail for a while is evident from the fact that he can repeat several remarks made by those who congregated near the jail immediately following his successful dash for liberty. He says it was his intention to go to Taylorsport to cross the river, but he heard County Attorney N. E. Riddell tell someone to telephone to that place as he would be apt to go there to get out of the State. He changed his mind and struck the river at William Seikman's below there where he found Mr. Seikman's John boat, in which he crossed the river, using two rails as oars. He then went to the home of his sister, who lives at the top of the hill back of Anderson's Ferry, where he arrived in about three hours from the time he left Burlington. The next evening he went to Valley Junction, where he took a Big Four train for Chicago, where he got work and remained until he was captured. He claims he was betrayed by a woman whom he induced to go from Cincinnati to Chicago, by writing to her over the name of one of her friends and offering her a position at $15 per week. He says his meeting her at the railroad station in Chicago was the first inkling she had of the deception he had practiced upon her. The above is Robinson's version of his capture, but the fact is detectives had shadowed the woman whom they knew was his friend, and her going to Chicago gave them a clue as to his whereabouts, and they followed it up until he was located, his arrest following shortly thereafter. Robinson says he had been given a tip as to what was going on, and had drawn the money that was coming to him and was ready to leave the city when he was pulled, and had he not sacrificed time to get a glass of beer he would have landed in Canada instead of a jail. He was pretty nervous Tuesday night when Mr. Hume delivered him to Jailer Sammie Adams, having concluded from some cause that he was in danger of being waited upon by a mob, and more especially was he uneasy when two guards, heavily armed, were placed in jail with him for the night, as that proceedings confirmed his belief that his life was in danger. Robinson was delighted Wednesday morning when informed that the county attorney and jailer had requested that he be sent to the Covington jail for safe keeping, and he began to breathe easier. By noon, Wednesday, deputy sheriff Cropper had delivered the prisoner into the custody of the jailer at Covington.

Mr. Hume says when he was informed that a certain woman had gone from Dayton, Ohio, to Chicago, he requested that a close watch on mail going to and coming from her be kept, and it was not long before Robinson was located by that means, and he started after him at once upon being notified that it was known where he was.

Jailer Adams paid Mr. Hume the $100 reward he had offered for the return of Robinson to his custody.

Living in the Ground.

A party of hunters felled a large oak tree out on N. W. Carpenter's farm a few days ago, sanguine that they would capture at least one fine coon, but you can imagine their chagrin when not a living thing could be found in the tree. Upon a closer investigation of the hole in the stump through which it was believed the coon had passed into the tree, it was ascertained that, instead of going up into the trunk, the coon had gone in the opposite direction and was safely housed beneath the large stump, and to capture it would require more time and muscle than the hunters were willing to devote to the work. Consequently the animal was not molested.

J. O. Roberts has been on crutches several days—a sprained ankle.

W. B. Kelly Dead.

W. B. Kelly, 76, of Locust Grove neighborhood, died last Sunday afternoon after an illness of two years. He was one of the 13 children of Jesse and Jane Kelly, and died within a few hundred yards of the old home where he was born and raised. He was a member of the 55th Kentucky commanded by Col. W. S. O'Neal in the Civil war. He leaves a widow and three sons. His wife was a daughter of the late Capt. Robert Terrill, of Petersburg. The burial took place yesterday in the family cemetery on the homestead. Two of Mr. Kelly's brothers, John Kelly, of Indiana, and Wesley Kelly, of Missouri, died within the last few weeks, and his passing takes away from his neighborhood the last of his generation with one exception.

Boone county has not produced enough corn for many years to supply the local demands. Forty years ago its corn crop was large and hogs were turned in on the fields and fed themselves until they were ready for market. In those days a hog that weighed less than 300 pounds was not ready for market, but after preparing thousands of hogs for the slaughter an abundance of corn remained on hand yearly and nearly every farmer had large cribs full, ready to begin the fattening process again in the coming fall. In those days everybody had corn and plenty of it, but now the best farmers are among the most extensive buyers of corn. There are no indications of an increase in this county's production of corn.

The Consolidated Telephone Co. has three exchanges—Burlington, Beaver and Walton. Instead of calling for north or south as heretofore, the name of the exchange preceding the number wanted will be called. For example: A person at Walton wanting the RECORDER office, having got the exchange at Walton will call, "Burlington, 125." If a person in the zone of the Burlington exchange should want a party at Beaver, he should call, "Beaver" giving the number desired. An observance of these suggestions will facilitate business and be a great accommodation to the operators. The same method holds good if a party in the Hebron system is desired.

A Goat Story.

The following article appeared in a recent issue of the Indianapolis News: The farmers near Lawrenceburg, Ind., are having their land cleared of brush by goats. Dr. Ralph Tilley has purchased a herd of forty goats, and expects to have his farm in Harrison township entirely cleared of underbrush within a few months. The goats have been in that vicinity for the last five years and have changed owners ten times. As soon as their owner discovers that there is nothing left for the goats to feed on but tame grass they are lent or sold to another farmer for a similar purpose.—Lawrenceburg Press.

Historical Facts.

There are some historical facts relative to the early history of Lawrenceburg which are worth perpetuating. The corner portion of what is now the Grand hotel was the first three-story brick building erected in Indiana. It was built in 1819 by Jesse Hunt. The first public building in the United States to be lighted by natural gas was the old Methodist "meetin' house," which stood on the present site of the Liedertafel opera house. The first screw hay press in the United States was built near Hardentown.—Lawrenceburg Press.

Delivering Pooled Tobacco.

Robert Huey, of Commissary neighborhood, was one of the farmers in this part of the county who pooled his 1907 crop of tobacco, held it and had it prized at home, sending the samples to Winchester. A few days since he received notice to deliver his tobacco at the Farmers' & Shippers warehouse in Cincinnati, for delivery to the American Tobacco Co., and he commenced hauling it to the city last week.

Rev. Edgar Riley is making considerable progress in his effort to establish a public library in Burlington, and every citizen of the town can render him substantial assistance in some way. Should Men Talk Business at Home?

One of the real reasons of divorce of interest between men and women in this country is that women do not take an interest in their husband's business. Business bores most American women. We are too idealistic and too intellectual to care for its sordid details. Business does more than bore us; sooner or later the average woman grows to dislike business, and for a good reason, it is her rival in her husband's interest and affections, says the writer of an article entitled "The Inconsequential American Woman," in Appleton's. America is full of sad-eyed and well dressed women who complain that their husbands' lives they would share business" that they have no interest left for anything else. If you were to suggest to these women that they had once been given a chance to share in their h usbands' lives they would share at you in surprise. It would be useless to tell such a woman that she might have been a consulting partner in her husband's business had she wished. To this she has the reply, "Man ought to leave his business cares in his office." That is, a man's brain should be neatly divided into two parts; he should be able to switch off the thoughts which have occupied his business hours the way in which one extinguishes an electric light. He should at the same moment switch on the other half of his brain where should burn brightly with affection for his wife, love of amusement and desire for that kind of relaxation which his wife enjoys. The great majority of men have been made to believe that they should not "bring business home," so great is the power of reiterated suggestion. They actually think that it would not please them to have their wives take an intelligent interest in their pressing affairs.

In accordance with plans of the war department, Surgeon General O'Reilly has recently enlisted a large number of the most skilful and noted surgeons and physicians in an army medical reserve corps. The physicians were drawn from all over the country, a few here and a few there, and were chosen solely for their ability. In time of peace they will receive no compensation, although they may be called upon for consultation or advice. In time of war they will receive the regular pay of their rank, which will be lieutenant, major, lieutenant colonel and colonel. This, however, is no temptation to men of such a class. They have allowed themselves to be enlisted in the reserve corps solely as a matter of patriotic duty, and for the purpose of strengthening and improving the army medical service.

The Romanes lecture which President Roosevelt has been chosen to deliver at Oxford university in 1910 is given under the provisions of a bequest of the late George John Romanes, an eminent biologist. The lectureship was founded in 1891 for the purpose of giving the Oxford students an opportunity each year to hear a man of general eminence in art, literature or science, or one who had special claims for distinction in discussing some subject of high interest at the time. The first lecture was given by Gladstone. Among his successors have been Holman Hunt, Huxley, John Morley and Ambassador Bryce. Next year Mr. Balfour, the former British premier, will give the lecture.

Count Boni De Castellane has withdrawn his suit against his former wife for alimony. Considering that she obtained the divorce, the withdrawal of a demand for support is not altogether magnanimous; but it may be regarded so by himself and family, as the American girl who had nothing in their eyes to entitle her to the honor of an alliance with them but her money was given distinctly to understand that was all she was married for. But this sordid picture of vulgar greed is not deterring other American heiresses from tempting the same fate.

One of the little tragedies of the Boxer uprising in China has just come to light. The young American woman who painted the portrait of the late empress dowager wrote recently of the sittings, and mentions the long finger nails of her distinguished subject. In the hurried flight from Peking they were injured, and had to be cut, and the artist remarks in a tone which suggests a sigh, "They were only about three inches long when I painted the picture."

Tragedy in New Jersey. A woman going from one room to another in her house met the harmless, necessary cat carrying a mouse; whereupon the woman screamed and fell dead. The story, however, is imperfect. The scream must have startled and surprised the cat, and what we are really curious to know is whether the mouse escaped.

PRESIDENT SENDS STRONG MESSAGE

ACCOMPANYING REPORTS OF THE CONSERVATION CONGRESS

URGES NEEDED LEGISLATION

Document in a Measure Is a Defense of the Retiring Administration—Duty of the Present Generation to Its Descendants Pointed Out—Obligations of Citizenship—Urgent Need for the Development of the Country's Water Power.

Washington.—With the transmission of the report of the national conservation commission and accompanying papers, President Roosevelt also sent a message to congress. The following is a comprehensive synopsis of the document:

The president declares his entire concurrence with the statements and conclusions of the report and proceeds:

"It is one of the most fundamentally important documents ever laid before the American people. It contains the first inventory of its natural resources ever made by any nation. In condensed form it presents a statement of our available capital in material resources, which are the means of progress, and calls attention to the essential conditions upon which the perpetuity, safety and welfare of this nation now rest and must always continue to rest.

"The facts set forth in this report constitute an imperative call to action. The situation they disclose demands that we, neglecting for a time, if need be, smaller and less vital questions, shall concentrate an effective part of our attention upon the great material foundations of national existence, progress, and prosperity.

"The first of all considerations is the permanent welfare of our people; and true moral welfare, the highest form of welfare, can not permanently exist save on a firm and lasting foundation of material well-being. In this respect our situation is far from satisfactory. After every possible allowance has been made, and when every hopeful indication has been given its full weight, the facts still give reason for grave concern. It would be unworthy of our history and our intelligence, and disastrous to our future, to shut our eyes to these facts or attempt to laugh them out of court. The people should and will rightly demand that the great fundamental questions shall be given attention by their representatives. I do not advise hasty or ill-considered action on disputed points, but I do urge, where the facts are known, where the public interest is clear, that neither indifference and inertia, nor adverse private interests, shall be allowed to stand in the way of the public good.

"The great basic facts are already well known. We know that our population is now adding about one-fifth to its numbers in ten years, and that by the middle of the present century perhaps 150,000,000 Americans, and by its end very many millions more, must be fed and clothed from the products of our soil.

"We know now that our rivers can and should be made to serve our people effectively in transportation, but that the vast expenditures for our waterways have not resulted in maintaining, much less in promoting, inland navigation. Therefore, let us take immediate steps to ascertain the reasons and to prepare and adopt a comprehensive plan for inland waterway navigation that will result in giving the people the benefits for which they have paid but which they have not yet received. We know now that our forests are fast disappearing, that less than one-fifth of them are being conserved, and that no good purpose can be met by failing to provide the relatively small sums needed for the protection, use, and improvement of all forests still owned by the government, and to enact laws to check the wasteful destruction of the forests in private hands.

"We know now that our mineral resources once exhausted are gone forever, and that the needless waste of them costs us hundreds of human lives and nearly $500,000,000 a year. Therefore, let us undertake without delay the investigations necessary before our people will be in position, through state action or otherwise, to put an end to this huge loss and waste, and conserve both our mineral resources and the lives of the men who take them from the earth.

"This administration has achieved some things; it has sought, but has not been able, to achieve, others; it has doubtless made mistakes; but all it has done or attempted has been in the single, consistent effort to conserve and enlarge the rights and opportunities of the men and women of the United States. We are trying to conserve what is good in our social system, and we are striving toward this end when we endeavor to do away with what is bad. Success may be made too hard for some if it is made too easy for others. The rewards of common industry and thrift may be too small if the rewards for others, and on the whole less valuable, qualities, be made too large, and especially if the rewards for qualities which are really, from the public standpoint, undesirable, are permitted to become too large. Our aim is so far as possible to provide such conditions that there shall be equality of opportunity where there is equality of energy, fidelity and intelligence; when there is a reasonable equality of opportunity the distribution of rewards will take care of itself.

"The unchecked existence of monopoly is incompatible with equality of opportunity. The reason for the exercise of government control over great monopolies is to equalize opportunity. We are fighting against privilege. It was made unlawful for corporations to contribute money for election expenses in order to abridge the power of special privileges at the polls. Railroad rate control is an attempt to secure an equality of opportunity for all men affected by rail transportation; and that means all of us. The great anthracite coal strike was settled, and the pressing danger of a coal famine averted, because we recognized that the control of a public necessity involves a duty to the people, and that public intervention in the affairs of a public service corporation is neither to be resented as usurpation nor permitted as a privilege by the corporations, but on the contrary to be accepted as a duty and exercised as a right by the government in the interest of all the people. The efficiency of the army and the navy has been increased so that our people may follow in peace the great work of making this country a better place for Americans to live in, and our navy was sent round the world for the same ultimate purpose. All the acts taken by the government during the last seven years, and all the policies now being pursued by the government, at in as parts of a consistent whole.

"The enactment of a pure food law was a recognition of the fact that the public welfare overweighs the right to private gain, and that no men may poison the people for his private profit. The employers' liability bill recognized the controlling fact that when the employer usually has at stake no more than his profit, the stake of the employe is a living for himself and his family.

"We are building the Panama canal; and this means that we are engaged in the giant engineering feat of all time. We are striving to add in all ways to the habitability and beauty of our country. We are striving to hold in the public hands the remaining supply of unappropriated coal, for the protection and benefit of all the people. We have taken the first steps toward the conservation of our natural resources, and to the betterment of country life, and the improvement of our waterways. We stand for the right of every child to a childhood free from grinding toil, and to an education; for the civic responsibility and decency of every citizen; for prudent foresight in public matters, and for fair play in every relation of our national and economic life. In international matters we apply a system of diplomacy which puts the obligations of international morality on a level with those that govern the actions of an honest gentleman in dealing with his fellow men. For our own border we stand for truth and honesty in public and in private life; and we war sternly against wrongdoers of every grade. All these efforts are integral parts of the same attempt, the attempt to enthrone justice and righteousness, to secure freedom of opportunity to all of our citizens, now and hereafter, and to set the ultimate interest of all of us above the temporary interest of any individual, class, or group.

"The nation, its government, and its resources exist, first of all, for the American citizen, whatever his creed, race, or birthplace, whether he be rich or poor, educated or ignorant, provided only that he is a good citizen, recognizing his obligations to the nation for the rights and opportunities which he owes to the nation.

"The obligations, and not the rights, of citizenship increase in proportion to the increase of a man's wealth or power. Wrong doing when a man will be judged, not by what he has succeeded in getting for himself from the common store, but by how well he has done his duty as a citizen, and by what the ordinary citizen has gained in freedom of opportunity because of his service for the common good. The highest value we know is that of the individual citizen, and the highest justice is to give him fair play in the effort to realize the best there is in him.

"The tasks this nation has to do are great tasks. They can only be done at all by our citizens acting together, and they can be done best of all by the direct and simple application of homely common sense. The application of common sense to common problems for the common good, under the guidance of the principles upon which this republic was based, and by virtue of which it exists, spells perpetuity for the nation, civil and industrial liberty for its citizens, and freedom of opportunity in the pursuit of happiness for the plain American, for whom this nation was founded, by whom it was preserved, and through whom alone it can be perpetuated. Upon this platform—larger than any party differences, higher than class prejudice, broader than any question of profit and loss—there is room for every American who realizes that the common good stands first."

Accompanying the message are explanations and recommendations of work to be done for the future good of the country. The president says: "It is especially important that the development of water power should be guarded with the utmost care both by the national government and by the states in order to protect the people against the upgrowth of monopoly and to insure to them a fair share in the benefits which will follow the development of this great asset which belongs to the people and should be controlled by them.

"I urge that provision be made for both profection and more rapid development of the national forests. Otherwise, either through the use of these forests by the people must be checked or their profection against fire must be dangerously weakened. If we compare the actual damage by similar areas on private and national forest lands during the past year, the government fire patrol saved commercial timber worth as much as the total cost of caring for all national forests at the present rate for about ten years.

"I especially commend to congress the facts presented by the commission as to the relation between forests and stream flow in its bearing upon the importance of the forest lands in national ownership. Without an understanding of this ultimate relation the conservation of both these natural resources must largely fail.

"The time has fully arrived for recognizing in the law the responsibility to the community, the state, and the nation which attaches to the private ownership of private lands. The ownership of forest land is a public trust. The man who would handle his forest as to cause erosion and to injure stream flow must be not only educated, but he must be controlled."

In conclusion the president urges upon congress the responsibility of maintaining a national commission of the conservation of the resources of the country. He adds: "I would also advise that an appropriation of at least $50,000 be made to cover the expenses of the national conservation commission for necessary rent, assistance and traveling expenses. This is a very small sum. I know of no other way in which the appropriation of so small a sum would result in so large a benefit to the whole nation."

DAYTON'S NEW MURDER MYSTERY

GIRL ENTICED TO LONELY SPOT, ASSAULTED AND KILLED BY A FIEND.

BODY THEN HID IN A SHED

Rivals That in Sensational Features Dona Gilman and Anna Markowitz Cases—Two Suspects Under Arrest.

Dayton, O., Jan. 25.—Rivaling in sensational features the Dona Gilman and Anna Markowitz cases is another murder mystery with which the local police are now grappling.

Mary Forschner, aged 15, scarcely more than a child, but buxom and pretty, lies cold in death in Berk & Fry's morgue, on Fifth street, and her sealed lips hold the secret of a criminal assault and murder. She was choked to death early Saturday night in a field extending along Knox street, within a short distance of her home, at Vermont and Knox avenue. Her body was dragged to the barn on the Grafton-Kennedy estate, where it was found at 2 o'clock Sunday morning.

Police Chief Aliaback and Crief Detective Hughes admit that they are at sea. Two suspects are under arrest, but the officials state that they are held principally as witnesses.

The girl left the home of her stepfather, Robert Geppert, in North Dayton shortly after 6 o'clock Saturday evening, carrying a Dayton Savings & Trust Co.'s deposit book for the purpose of placing $9 in the bank, as partial payment on a lot which her stepfather had purchased some time ago. Her movements from that time until her body was found are a mystery to police and relatives. When she failed to return Mr. Geppert and the girl's mother, brothers and sister Maggie became alarmed and instituted a search.

Geppert secured a lantern and began searching the neighborhood about 10:30, but failed to notify the police. He enlisted the aid of several neighbors, including Arthur Hyre and John Merkle.

Not until after midnight was information sent to the police. Then Lieut. Haley dispatched several officers to North Dayton to assist in the search, but before they arrived the stepfather made a horrifying discovery.

Discovering that the wet ground had been torn up as if by persons in a desperate struggle, he followed a trail which led to the shed in the rear of the Kennedy home, and by the aid of his lantern found the lifeless body of his stepchild. The girl was lying on her face as if she had been thrown carelessly down by her heartless assailant.

The coroner was on the scene by 5:30. His superficial examination showed that the victim had been choked into submission by the fiend, who, after accomplishing his purpose, dragged the girl through the mud to the barn.

In the field was found knee prints of the slayer, giving the impression that he wore corduroy trousers. This may prove an important clue.

STEAMER BALTIC,

With Passengers of Steamers Florida and Republic, Nearing Sandy Hook.

New York, Jan. 25.—The steamer Baltic, with the passengers of the steamers Florida and Republic, were reported at 1:30 Monday morning as nearing her anchorage off Sandy Hook by the Marconi wireless station at Seagate. The Baltic will anchor for the night, and will not come up to the city until well in the morning.

Siasconset, Nantucket, Mass., Jan. 25.—Wireless messages from the Baltic Sunday night confirmed the earlier report of fatalities aboard the Republic when the collision occurred, but raised the number from four to six, two of the victims being passengers and the other four seamen in the crow of the big liner. Two other passengers were seriously injured.

Brave Conductor Killed.

Pottstown, Pa., Jan. 25.—In an effort to save Mrs. Mary Groff, aged 60, from death, John Dillinger, a Reading railway conductor, met death under an express train Sunday night. Mrs. Groff was so badly injured that she will probably die. Conductor Dillinger leaves a widow and four children in Pottsville.

Student Electrocuted.

Ithaca, N. Y., Jan. 25.—On the eve of the festivities of junior week the Cornell undergraduate community was shocked by the tragic death of Parkman Leavitt, of East Orange, N. J., a freshman in the College of Mechanical Engineering. Leavitt was electrocuted by contact with a live wire on Oak avenue Sunday night.

Officers Seized Everything in Sight.

Memphis, Tenn., Jan. 25.—Officers levied on the effects of the Bepalmas indoor circus, which has been touring southern states, and seized everything in sight. Attachments sued by local restaurants caused the trouble.

Greeted With Cat Calls.

London, Jan. 25.—When Carrie Nation, the saloon smasher, made her London debut as a temperance lecturer at the Shakespeare theater she was greeted with a chorus of cat calls from a hostile clique in rear of theater.

LIFEBOAT CREWS' QUICK WORK.

Can Lower Boat and Leave Ship in Two Minutes.

Aboard the Romantic the other day several officers were talking about the length of time required to launch and man one of the large lifeboats that swing from davits on the upper deck, a distance of perhaps 60 feet above the sea. It was agreed that a boat can be lowered with its crew and get away from the ship in two minutes in anything like decent weather.

An instance was related where a man had fallen from the Romantic while she was speeding 14 knots. The alarm was sounded, a boat lowered and the swimmer rescued after a considerable row back over the course to where he was floundering about. The crew had the rescued individual back to the ship with the boat in its chocks in just 17 minutes, which is regarded a most creditable performance. There was no ice on the rope falls to hamper the work and everything worked smoothly or the boat would have been much longer on its mission.

A steamship of 10,000 tons when going at full speed has momentum sufficient to carry her at least two miles after the engines are stopped, providing the sea is fairly quiet. Crews of lifeboats frequently have hard work cut out for them while going to a rescue before the headway of the vessel has been stopped.—Boston Herald.

An Abandoned Villain.

An actor in a small company was unable one night to get accommodation at the only hotel, it is said, because its proprietor, a remarkably slow-going person for such a country, recognized him as the villain in the melodrama who had stolen a cash box, set fire to a house, killed a detective, damaged a race horse and betrayed the hero's sister.

But something like this really did happen to George Scott, manager of the Alhambra, in London. In his younger days Mr. Scott was a stage villain of the deepest dye, and one of his favorite parts was that of the wicked Levison in "East Lynne."

After playing the character a few nights in Blackpool, he had occasion for wishing to change his lodgings, and, knocking at the door of a house in the next street, was greeted by the good lady who opened it with a shriek and the subsequent exclamation:

"What! It's Levison, the dirty villain. Ye can't 'ave rooms in my 'ouse! Get out, or I'll call the perlice!"—Magazine About People.

Inedible Chicken.

"It doesn't pay to raise chickens in a small way," said a suburbanite, "for the reason that you can only eat the eggs, never the chickens themselves."

"But why can't you eat the chickens?" inquired the man's partner.

"Could you eat your canary or your dog? No. And for much the same reason you can't eat your chickens. For they are pets, as dogs or canaries are. You have raised them, they have learned to know you, they have names that they answer to, they follow you about the yard—in a word, they like you, and you like them."

He shuddered.

"I remember when we killed and stewed old Mary Jane. She had stopped laying; sho was long past that stage; so we murdered her and tried to eat her. But we failed. We felt like cannibals, like ghouls, when Mary Jane's mangled remains were set smoking before us. Eat? Why, the very memory half sickens me now."

Prize Offered Inventors.

The Ligue Nationale Aerienne recently received from Commandant Dolfuss the offer of a prize of $2,000 for the first kite of a French construction capable of lifting a man to the height of 200 meters, and of maintaining him in the air for a period of at least one hour. It is interesting to see that attention is thus again directed to the use of kites, which would appear to have been somewhat neglected owing to the success of the apparatus of the aeroplane type

Western Canada the Pennant Winner

"The Last Best West"

160 ACRE FARMS IN WESTERN CANADA FREE

The government of Canada now gives to every actual settler 160 acres of wheat-growing land free and an additional 160 acres at $3.00 an acre. The 300,000 contented American settlers making their homes in Western Canada is the best evidence of the superiority of that country. They are becoming rich, growing from 25 to 50 bushels wheat to the acre; 60 to 110 bushels oats and 45 to 60 bushels barley, besides having splendid herds of cattle raised on the prairie grass. Dairying is an important industry.

The crop of 1908 still keeps Western Canada in the lead. The world will soon look to it as its food-producer.

"The thing which most impressed us was the magnitude of the country that is available for agricultural purposes."—National Editorial Correspondence, 1908.

EVERYTHING WAS FAVORABLE

SORRY HE DIDN'T MOVE TO WESTERN CANADA BEFORE.

Mr. Austin was a man who had never had any previous experience in farming, but Western Canada had allurements, and he profited. He got a low-rate certificate from a Canadian Government agent, and then moved. What he says is interesting:

"Ranfurly, Alberta, May 10'08.

"J. N. Grieve, Esqr., Spokane, Washington.—Dear Sir: After a dozen or more years of unsuccessful effort in the mercantile business in Western Washington, in August, 1903, decided to come to Alberta with a gentleman who was shipping two cars live stock to Edmonton. I assisted this man with the stock over one hundred miles out in the Birch Lake Country, East of Edmonton. Indeed, how surprised, how favorably everything compared with my dream of what I wanted to see in a new country.

"Had never had any experience in farming, but I was immediately converted into a farmer. And from that moment I have prospered. Selecting a homestead near Birch Lake, I returned for wife and three small children and freighted out from Edmonton in March following year we shoveled a spot clear of snow and pitched our tent and commenced operations, at that time we had no neighbors. Four years have passed, the locality is well settled, two miles from railway station, with churches and schools, telephone and good road accommodations.

"We are enjoying the privileges granted to any rural district in Washington. The Birch Lake Country is no exception, this great transformation is rapidly going on in every district in Western Canada.

"I estimate that every quarter section in every direction is capable of producing a comfortable living for a family of ten forever. After paying for two horses and a cow, had just $10.00 to go on. Did my first ploughing in my life. I was very awkward in my work, but nature was glad and I was abundantly paid for my efforts. Our cattle has increased to about fifty head, which was very profitable on account of the abundance of forage. The farm was compelled to buy about four hundred dollars' worth of farm machinery on time, and the payments fell due last fall, and you may wonder how I expected to pay for them when we had such a bad year. 'Twas a little bad for Western Canada or for a Missourian. But is not 35 or 40 bushels oats a pretty good yield per acre in many States? Then the price of grain went out of sight, so when I had sold my crop I found I was able to make my payments nicely, besides we had lots of feed. No one has any business raising cattle without growing grain, or vice versa. As to the winters, did not feed my cattle, excepting the calves, a fork of hay until in March. Have found the winters much more pleasant than we did in Western Washington. This is strange and hard to explain, but 'tis true, nevertheless, at 40 degrees below zero we have more comfort than you would at 20 degrees above, so still and dry—with bright, sunny days. My wife says that the only regret she has is that we did not come here ten years ago, as we would now certainly have been in a position to retire from hard work. Most women soon become satisfied as neighbors begin to come round them. Have 98 acres in crop this year, besides two acres potatoes, which have always brought me a fair price. We find a ready market for everything we produce. To the Poor Man—Here is a chance to establish yourself. To the Rich Man—Here is a chance to buy land for $10.00 to $15.00 per acre which will produce more crops than a half dozen acres of yours at $50.00 to $75.00 per acre land. And if not very much mistaken, this year will prove an eye opener to those who are a little sceptical. The trouble with me is that I have so much to say so favorable to Alberta 'tis hard to be brief. Respectfully,

(Signed) "P. S. AUSTIN."

Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure now known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. LAKE FIRE HORROR

ABOUT SEVENTY MEN PERISH IN CHICAGO DISASTER.

CRIB IS A BLAZING TRAP

Workmen Burned to Death or Drowned in the Icy Waters—Many Rescued by a Tug.

Chicago.—Death in frightful form—a choice between incineration or drowning in the ice-clogged lake—descended on probably 70 men at eight o'clock Wednesday morning when fire attacked the temporary crib of the new southwest land and water tunnel a mile and a half off Seventy-third street.

As nearly as can be learned, 120 men, mostly employes of George W. Jackson (Inc.), were in the crib at the time. Of these 47 are known to have been burned to death, as that number of bodies, so charred and mutilated as to make identification practically impossible, were recovered.

Others Perish in Lake.

Still others—number unknown and probably never to be revealed—lost their lives while battling with the icy waters which surrounded the blazing crib, having cast themselves into the lake in the vain hope that they might survive till help should arrive.

With the exception of the Iroquois disaster, which stands high in the list of world horrors, it was the most ruthless slaughter Chicago ever has ever known.

The cause of the fire and responsibility for the disaster remain undetermined. A rigid inquiry has been begun by Coroner Hoffman and the police.

Tug Prompt in Rescue.

Had it not been for the arrival of the tug T. T. Morford within ten minutes of the beginning of the fire every man on the crib probably would have perished. Some of the men sprang naked into the water, with portions of their bodies burned to a crisp, and battled their way to ice floes. Here they dragged themselves up, only to freeze to the floes and to leave strips of flesh upon the icy surface when they were removed by the crew of the Morford.

Others of the men endeavored to hold themselves suspended by ropes at an angle from the burning structure, only to be roasted piecemeal or to have the ropes budn through, plunging them to death in the water.

Many of these men were of those who could not swim and who knew that to jump into the water was only to leap to death.

Death by Slow Burning.

They, therefore, made pitiable attempts to elude the flames and met a harrowing death by slow burning. Even those men who could swim and who were not burned suffered terribly from the cold of the water and from freezing on the ice floes. Some of those who could swim failed to reach a bit of ice whereon they could drag themselves and died from drowning.

Still others of the unfortunates, and these were more lucky than their fellows, inasmuch as they met only death and not agony, were caught in their bunks asleep and died almost instantly in the raging hell of the crib.

The fire broke out shortly after the night shift had gone off watch. Some of the men had gone to bed or were preparing to go, and thus were caught without even clothing. Many of the men rescued from the floes by the Morford were naked or nearly so. Some of these, however, had been fully dressed when the fire broke out, but had their clothes burned off them.

Anguished Women Shriek.

Nor was the agony at the crib by any means the total of all the anguish of the time. Eight thousand feet distant, on the shore, helpless, shrieking, hysterical or dumb with horror, were grouped women and children and men—the relatives of those who were dead or dying.

The news of the catastrophe spread as rapidly as the flames themselves, and in a short time the shore between Seventy-fifth street and Sixty-eighth street was lined with human beings whose mental anguish was as frightful as the physical anguish out in the fog-covered lake.

The smoke and the flames could be seen from the shore, despite the gray fog bank. Every eye was on the flames, and each impotent onlooker realized that those flames meant death or indescribable suffering to father, brother, husband.

The inferno at the crib was increased in horror about fifteen minutes after the beginning of the fire by the explosion of dynamite which was used in blasting. Nearly three hundred pounds of dynamite were at the crib and part of this exploded.

There is a conflict of opinion as to what caused the fire. One theory is that one of the workmen threw a lighted match on a small portion of the dynamite and that it burned slowly. Others declare that the fire was due to crossed electric wires.

RUTH BRYAN ASKS DIVORCE

SHE ALLEGES NON-SUPPORT AGAINST HER HUSBAND.

"Commoner's" Daughter Begins Action for a Legal Separation from William H. Leavitt.

Lincoln, Neb., Jan. 23.—Suit for divorce from her husband, William H. Leavitt, was filed here yesterday by Ruth Bryan Leavitt, daughter of William J. Bryan. Her counsel at once withdrew the petition.

T. S. Allen, brother-in-law of Mr. Bryan, is the attorney for the plaintiff. Leavitt is now in Paris.

The reason given in the petition is alleged non-support. To minimize publicity, the attorney exercised a common privilege of taking back into his possession the documents in the case. The suit is not withdrawn.

MRS. RUTH BRYAN LEAVITT.

Bryan for the first time in 1902, when he went to Fairview, the Bryan farm, to paint Mr. Bryan's portrait.

The two fell in love, and in the face of firm opposition from Mr. and Mrs. Bryan, they were married. Mrs. Bryan refused to attend the ceremony, but Mr. Bryan gave away the bride with what good will he could muster. The date of the marriage was October 3, 1903.

The two soon quarreled. Leavitt, an improvident Bohemian, was unable to support his wife, and they lived in Denver for a time in absolute want. Two babies were born, and Leavitt, raising a little money, decided to go to Europe to study.

It was soon after this that Mr. Bryan went to Denver, found his daughter and her children actually lacking food, and brought her back to his home.

CALIFORNIA A GREAT STATE

THERMAL, CALA., Jan. 22, 1909.

DEAR EDITOR:—We arrived here about seven weeks ago, and are enjoying good health at present, and the beautiful warm sunshine that attracts so many people during the winter months.

Thermal is a small town, situated on the S. P. Road about 130 miles southeast of Los Angeles, in the center of Coachella valley. The valley at one time was covered with water, and is supposed to have been an inland sea, as the salt deposits are still visible on the beach lines at the foot of the mountains. The valley is 122 feet below sea level. I believe this to be the best climate on earth. They have no snow, or mud to contend with and but little rain, therefore, a man can work most ever day during the winter. Here in the valley they have the best artesian water in the west.

Some two weeks past my wife and I visited Los Angeles and at Long Beach. While there we enjoyed the kind hospitality of R. L. Clutterbuck and wife, who demonstrated thoroughly that they were born and bred in "Old Kentucky." To say that Roy and I were glad to see each other puts it mildly, as we sat at the supper table and talked until 2 a. m., —talking over old times. We also visited Mr. John J. Griffith and wife, and were entertained very pleasantly. Mr. and Mrs. Finch live with their daughter. They are well and perfectly contented with California life. I also had a talk with Herbert McKim, who claims that California is the only State for him. I had the pleasure of meeting William Mullins, a former Gunpowder boy, who is doing well. He has charge of a ranch near Glendora, owned by a millionaire. Bill was to marry, the afternoon I met him, a lady of Redondo Beach, whom I met also.

Taken in all I think California is a great State, but with all her flowers and fine climate, I have not one word to say against "Old Kentucky," my parent State; the one that nourished me from infancy to the time I left home, and I firmly believe she will continue to do so if I decide to come back to her. May God bless her. With regards to all in "Old Boone." Yours very sincerely,

G. W. SANDFORD.

Value of the Corn Crop.

Hon. Jas. Wilson, Secretary of Agriculture, in his annual report for 1908, speaks of corn in these words: "It is the greatest of all crops whose production this year is 2,643,000,000 bushels. The value of this crop is $1,615,000,000. This wealth grown out of the soil in four months of rain, sunshine and drought, is enough to cancel the interest bearing debt of the United States and to pay for the Panama Canal and fifty battleships. This crop is worth this year nearly as much as the great crops of cotton, hay and wheat combined. Compared with the averages of the preceding 5 years the quality is 2 per cent higher and the value 43 per cent higher."

Revolts At Cold Steel.

"Your only hope," said three doctors to Mrs. M. E. Fisher, Detroit, Mich. suffering from severe rectal trouble, "lies in an operation." Dr. Furnivall Cracks Hardest Nut in Criminal Annals Ingenuity of English "Con" Men and Its Result—Story with Mysterious Opening Tells of Suspected Robbery in Room in Hotel Versailles—Ultimate Consequences of Woman's Fear That Burglar Was Ransacking Room—Famous Physician-Detective Arrives at a Solution in Quick Order.

"GOOD GOD! FLANNIGAN, WHAT'S THE MATTER?"

At three o'clock in the morning the clerk at the small and select Hotel Versailles, busy with his books, paused suddenly with his pen poised and gazed toward the staircase, where he heard something that sounded like a rapid pat of feet on the soft carpet. Instantly around the corner of the landing appeared a figure in white, coming down two steps at a leap.

"Good Lord!" the startled clerk gasped, and stopped from sheer inability to utter another word. He had recognized one of the house's most beautiful and honored guests in the flying shape, Miss Thorndyke of London, and she was garbed solely in a spotless white robe de nuit!

Miss Thorndyke flew across the cold marble of the office floor, her naked feet twinkling, her garment fluttering, and with staring eyes and finger to lip beckoned the bewildered clerk.

"There's a man in my room, Mr. Bray!" she whispered excitedly. "I have locked him in, but he doesn't know it—hurry—quick—"

She gave a quick exclamation and seized the clerk's arm spasmodically as a scream floated out suddenly on the air, seeming in the solemn night silence to fill the whole building, so that it was impossible to judge from what direction it came. The clerk, bewildered, not knowing which way to turn, stood looking helplessly this way and that while the girl clung to his arm, white and speechless with fright.

The sudden opening of a nearby door, as a startled guest poked his head out, roused the clerk from his stupor, and wrenching his arm free from the girl's frantic grasp he sprang along the hall and down the stairs to the office. Here, he saw, to the demolishment of what shreds of sanity had remained to him, another woman in night attire, stretched on the floor, and over her recumbent body stood the burly form of a policeman with his night-stick drawn.

"Good God! Flannigan, what's the matter?" he managed to gasp.

The officer motioned to him to shut the street door against the curious eyes of any chance passerby. Then he held toward the clerk a black bag, made of fine broadcloth, with a drawstring around the neck.

"Do you know what is in this?" he said in a low tone.

"Mme. Selba's diamonds," he said, thickly, like a drunken man. A misty notion of what perhaps had nearly happened drained the strength from his body. Snatching the bag from the officer's hand he examined the contents feverishly. There were 14 leathern boxes, of varying shapes and sizes, locked and sealed by means of a strip of gummed paper with his own name on each of them, just as he had written it some hours before when he took charge of the bag. The blood returned to his cheeks, and with a sigh of relief from his very heart he placed the bag in the safe without examining it any further, and closing the door attempted to turn the handle. But the bolt refused to work.

"She was monkeying with it," whispered the policeman. "I seen her through the back winder, and I hit it for the front entrance for all I was worth, and caught her doing the sneak act with the bag. When I grabbed her she screeched for fair and buckled over on the floor. But say! who is she? By the rig she is sporting she must belong to the house, for she couldn't come far in it—"

"It is Mrs. Van Dyke, one of our best guests," said the clerk as soon as he could secure a good look at the unconscious woman's features. "I don't understand it at all," he added helplessly, "and I don't know what to do—"

Out from among the four or five guests who had been attracted to the spot by the commotion a physician stepped at this moment, and after bending over the body a moment, said to the clerk:

"She is in a hypnotic trance. Have her taken to her rooms at once. Do you know what doctor she has?"

"She does not believe in medicine, and has no doctor," responded the clerk.

"Then I will attend to her for the moment, for she must be brought out of this coma," said the physician. "Send to my rooms and ask my wife for some amly nitrite, and I'll see Mrs. Van Dyke through."

At this moment the husband of the unconscious lady, insufficiently clothed and wild with excitement, came bounding down the stairs.

The lady gave a deep sigh.

"Tell me, Evalina," said Mr. Van Dyke, tenderly. He gently drew the fingers away. "It is I, dear. You are safe now; don't feel afraid any longer. Tell me what you mean. Of what man do you speak? What has he done? Why were you out of bed at three o'clock in the morning, and what has happened? Can't you speak and tell me, dear?"

With evident effort she succeeded in restraining the hysteria on the verge of which the symptoms showed her nerves to be tottering, and answered in a low voice:

"It is Mr. Wrinkle. You know that in the first place he hypnotized me and so cured my dreadful headaches. Of course I was grateful and sometimes allowed him to experiment on me in his classes, so that his pupils could obtain a practical knowledge of his methods. Being highly interested in hypnotism I was very glad to secure all the insight into it that I could, and so I went frequently to see Mr. Wrinkle. He told me I was his best subject, saying jokingly that it was a great pity I was so very rich, for if I had been poor he would have given me a good salary to act regularly as his subject, and together we should make wonderful discoveries in the realm of mind. He gave me telepathic messages while I was wide awake and at a distance from him, and I received them as strongly as if I were in the room with him. He would command me mentally to do this or that, and I hadn't it in my power to resist. I always carried out his instructions, even against my will. I could not help doing as he demanded. I could not rest, either, until I had done so, after once receiving his messages. His commands were always harmless and amusing little things until this last one came, and we had great fun over them. But this morning I awoke suddenly to hear his mental voice repeating this suggestion:

"'Exactly at three o'clock I wish you to rise, go down stairs to your hotel office, open the door of the safe, which you will find unlocked, take from it a black bag, carry the bag to your parlor and drop it out of the front window. When you have done this return to your bed, go to sleep and forget the whole incident.'

"This was the message, which he repeated several times, until I had the words by heart. Then he stopped and I remember nothing more. But I have a vague consciousness of having done something dreadful—what it can be I don't—"

The last words came in a weak whisper, and as she uttered them she fainted in her husband's arms.

"Dr. Furnivall, I am in great trouble, and I have called to see if I can enlist your sympathies in my behalf.

"I wish to keep my name a secret for the moment in order to—er—to, you know—er—to test—test—"

He paused again in embarrassment. Dr. Furnivall completed the sentence for him.

"Yes," said Dr. Furnivall, with great dryness of tone.

"How much so you shall judge. Listen. You were born in Kennebunk Me., 37 years ago, the 9th day of last April. You studied for the Christian ministry, were taken sick and never finished your college course, went to California for the climate, sold life insurance in San Francisco, became engaged to a girl who jilted you for a famous featherweight pugilist, which made you a woman-hater for two months, or until your interest became awakened by psychology. This you studied under a poor teacher, who had himself entered only the outskirts of the telepathic city, and, taking up mental healing, came to this town, met a woman who proved to be the best subject you ever had, as you thought for a time, but of whom now you don't know what to think, for she has charged you wantonly with a crime which it is not in your nature to commit, and you are come here to-day to ask my assistance in freeing you of the charge. And your name is—is—let's see, R—R—no, not the letter R, but the sound R—Wrinkle. Your name is William W. Wrinkle!"

Dr. Furnivall sighed as if with relief over the accomplishment of a Titanic task and sat back in his chair.

"Now," Dr. Furnivall went on, "I am going to clear you of this charge—on one condition."

For an instant the hypnotist remained as if he had not heard. Then he raised his eyes, with inquiry in them, to the doctor's.

"The condition is, that you give me your promise to refrain from attempting to practice hypnotism until you feel assured that you know what you are about. You'll know when you have arrived at this state of knowledge, if you ever do arrive—don't worry about that. You will entertain no doubt about it whatever. Do you promise—the fulfillment to rest contingent on my clearing you?"

"Yes," he said, huskily, and dropped his eyes again to the floor.

The hypnotist looked at him undeterminedly, as if he wished to ask the real reason, but did not dare do so. He did not understand Dr. Furnivall's smile, which had in it a touch of the cryptic and occult.

"At all events," he finally screwed up his courage to say, "it is impossible to suspect this gentlewoman of any wanton misdoing. She is very rich, very high-minded, a lovely character, of an old family—"

"Come!" Dr. Furnivall interrupted, giving this man's estimate of character and conditions as much attention as he would the chattering of a monkey. "I am interested to know just how the scheme was worked and what part that lovely young English girl played in it. It was she who lured the clerk from the office, leaving the safe unguarded. In fact, there are several little items in this case that excite my thirst for knowledge. Come!"

"But, I have been hiding; they will recognize me, arrest me—"

"I'll take care of you—come!" said Dr. Furnivall, and Wrinkle meekly obeyed.

At Station 16 Dr. Furnivall picked up two policemen, whom he took with him to the hotel. There the landlord, after a few words that startled him a good deal had been spoken in his ear by Dr. Furnivall, immediately showed the party to the suite occupied by the rich and exclusive Van Dykes. The husband and wife were alone together, and while the officers drew themselves up, one on each side of the door, Dr. Furnivall removed his spectacles and advanced to the lady, who sat by the window, with a book in her hand.

"Madam," he said, "be good enough to look at me!"

She was a tall blonde with a beautiful skin of red and white, a willowy form, luscious lips, and blue eyes that were incomparably lovely and melting and tender. She beamed up at him with a smile that would capture the heart of almost any man except the one she was bestowing it on at the moment. He stood with one hand in his pocket, and easily repeated the command:

"Mrs. Van Dyke, tell me in as few words as possible, who you are and what you know about the attempted theft of Mme. Selba's diamonds."

In a colorless voice, she answered at once:

"Our name is Seely, not Van Dyke. We pretended to belong to that old family for social reasons. We are adventurers. My husband and I have followed this singer three months waiting for an opportunity to appropriate her diamonds, which, we discovered, she always left in charge of the hotel whenever she was stopping, on returning from the theater. At this small hotel there is but one night-clerk, and the last bell-boy goes to bed at two o'clock in the morning. We studied to get this clerk out of the way for a few minutes, leaving the safe unlocked, and it must be after the bell-boy had gone. My husband learned the make of the safe, examined those like it at the salesrooms, had a small piece of iron made to fit into the bolt-socket, and last evening managed to spike the safe in the face and eyes of the clerk—an easy matter, for he used to be a professional sleight-of-hand performer. We had become acquainted with the Thorndikes at the table, and knew that the daughter would not dare to waken her mother by screaming, for she has a serious heart trouble and the physician has warned them against startling her in any way, so that if the daughter could be made to believe there was somebody in her room she would be likely to run to the clerk, who would probably start so hastily for the scene that he would not give much attention to the condition of the safe.

"We had secured a room just under Miss Thorndike's, and at three o'clock this morning my husband, through a long tube of tin, made on the telescope pattern, which he thrust up to her open window, imitated certain noises, as if a man were stumbling around in the dark. This awakened her, and she did as we had studied it out that she would do—she ran for the office. And while the clerk was absent from his place I hastened down and secured the black bag containing the diamonds. But a policeman, who, as we have since learned, was in the habit of coming to the back door for a dram which was furnished him every morning at just that time by the night-clerk, saw me at the safe and—"

"Yes, but please tell me what Mr. Wrinkle had to do with all this?"

"Mr. Wrinkle was the provision we made for my escape from conviction in case I should be caught in the risky venture. I posed before him and his pupils as a completely helpless hypnotic subject in his hands, taking great care that he and they should become convinced that his mind dominated me wholly, even at a distance. Then if our plan should fail in any way, and I should be apprehended, I could pretend to be in a hypnotic trance, produced by him, and acting under his direction, with no responsibility of my own. I had many witnesses, his pupils, to prove that he could command me in this way. Then he, not I, would be convicted!"

The authors of this ingenious scheme were found to be two noted English confidence workers, wanted in London on so many serious charges that, being sent back there by the United States authorities, they were each of them given sentences that meant practically for life.

District Attorney Heney of San Francisco, a short time after his wounding, discussed with a reporter at his bedside one of his statements about the San Francisco boodlers.

"He, you know, printed a story to the effect that a rival editor's father had served 37 years in jail. Pressure was brought to bear on him, and finally he agreed to retract that statement. In his retraction he said:

"'We find that we were mistaken when we said in last week's issue that the Clarion editor's papa had passed 37 summers in the penitentiary. All efforts of friends to have his sentence commuted to life imprisonment failed, and the old man, as a matter of fact, was hung.'"

HAGGAI

The Prophet Revives the Temple-Building Project.

The Prophet Haggai.—He was probably born at Babylon, and accompanied Zerubbabel to Jerusalem; though some consider that he had seen the glory of the old temple before it destruction (see 2:3) and that he was one of the very aged exiles who laid the foundation of the new temple in tears (Ezra 3:12). His great mission was the encouragement of Zerubbabel, the governor of Jerusalem, and Joshua, the high priest, in the rebuilding of the temple and in arousing the people to their support after the work had been suspended for 14 years in consequence of the counter edict obtained from Artaxerxes by the Samaritans. The prophecy is short and condensed and covers the brief period of four months. In 24 days the rebuilding is renewed. The youthful Zechariah is moved to second Haggai's work, but after one brief prophecy, is silenced. After four weeks the people became despondent and compare the new temple with the old. But Haggai foretells greater glory for the former. Two months later he again rebukes their slowness, and promises divine favor. He finally appeals to Zerubbabel, as the heir of the house of David, and predicts the stability of the kingdom of God amidst the ruin of temporal sovereignties.

Scripture Authority—The Book of Haggai.

SERMONETTE.

Those who are grown cold in the Lord's service can always see the difficulties in the way to hinder further progress.

God's people are too prone to say a needful work cannot be done, and rest content in the ease of the present condition.

There were the foundation walls of the temple just as they had been left 14 years before when the work had been stopped, and the Jewish colony had come to believe that the building would never be completed. "It can't be done," they said.

It was at such a time as that that God spake, chiding them for wicked indifference to religious obligations, and commanding them, "Consider your ways."

This is a warning as well as an appeal, and comes with equal force to God's people to-day as in the days of Haggai when the prophet delivered the Lord's message and sought to arouse the people to a fulfillment of their obligations to him.

"Consider your ways."
Whither do they trend?
Away from God or toward God?

"Consider your ways," and know whether there is the even balance to the life whereby God's claims are recognized and God's service performed.

Are you getting warped? Are you getting so deformed in vision and desire as to know only the self-purposes and ambitions?

"Consider your ways." For if God is being left out of your reckoning you are making a fatal mistake. You are putting your all into a "bag with holes."

Haggai points out the solemn truth that withholding from God means poverty of life and heart; means a shriveling up of the spiritual nature which must eventually leave one marooned upon the desolate island of self-purpose, while the ships of God sail by bearing their precious cargoes of human lives, human lives which have embarked on the sea of God's purposes and are bound for the sure harbor of eternal realization.

"Consider your ways." Whither are you trending?

THE STORY.

HAGGAI did not often pass that way, but on this particular morning, moved by some strange impulse, he had ascended the heights toward the temple site and stood viewing the desolate ruins.

To the heart of the devout prophet the sight brought but one feeling, that of discouragement and doubt.

"Could it be that the temple was ever to be completed?" he asked himself, and then by way of answer shook his head in a dejected way, while the tears filled his eyes and a sigh burst from his lips.

Fifteen years before he had been among the colonists who had returned to Jerusalem from the captivity in Babylon and had hopefully begun the building of the city and the temple. And while the enthusiasm lasted the work went on splendidly. The city began to take on something of its old-time activity. The people rebuilt their homes and the ruins of the temple had been partially cleared away and the foundation of a new structure begun.

Then had come the check in the work caused by the jealous Samaritans, and now for 14 years nothing further had been done towards rebuilding the temple of God. The walls were overgrown with vine and bush, for nature is never idle, but with sympathetic touch seems to try to obliterate the evidence of man's neglect. But the very luxuriance of nature's covering only emphasized the neglect the more. It was a sight which Haggai did not like to behold, and it was seldom he came thither.

"Will it ever be completed?" he again asked himself, as he picked his way over the rock-strewn ground and seated himself upon one of the largest of the stones which had been hewn ready for its place in the wall so long before.

From his vantage point on the temple site he could look out over the city lying below. He marked the goodly dwellings which had been reared by the people since their return. He saw the smoke lazily creeping up from the fires in the central courts of the houses and where he knew the women were busy preparing the midday repast. He could see the people passing about through the streets and caught an occasional bright bit of color as it flashed in the brilliant light of the midday sun.

What a contrast there was. There the people were living in comfort and ease, while the temple of God lay in ruins. There was the activity of the busy mart, while here no sound broke the stillness and God was forgotten.

"It is all wrong!" exclaimed the prophet in a voice of mingled grief and anger. "And blessing cannot come to God's people while they neglect their obligations to him," he added, shaking his head with serious emphasis.

For a long time he was silent, while conflicting emotions stirred in his heart. Then the thought seized hold upon him that he was sitting idly there, and doing nothing to stir the people to action.

"Oh, God," he exclaimed, as the consciousness of a neglected mission swept over him, "help me to speak to the people. Give me a message."

The voice of the prophet rose and reverberated back and forth through the mass of ruins which surrounded him, and he turned to listen as the sound died away.

"Thy cry is heard," spake a voice from the midst of the ruins. "Go thou with this message to Zerubbabel, the governor, and Joshua, the high priest, saying: Thus speaketh the Lord of Hosts, saying: This people say, The time is not come, the time that the Lord's house should be built. Is it time for you, O ye, to dwell in your ceiled houses, and this house, the house of the Lord, lie waste? Now therefore thus saith the Lord of hosts: Consider your ways."

With breathless eagerness Haggai listened, and when the voice ceased he sprang from his seat upon the stone and hastened back over the ruins and down into the city as rapidly as possible, and soon hurst unceremoniously into the presence of the governor.

One look at the intense, flushed face of Haggai checked the word of reproof which he was upon the point of uttering for the abrupt entrance, and the next instant Haggai was pouring into Zerubbabel's ears, all that had transpired at the ruins of the temple and the words which the Lord had spoken.

"It is enough," exclaimed the governor. "We have erred."

And without further comment, but with an earnestness which betokened that it was a time for action and not for words, he ordered that it be proclaimed throughout the city that the next day the governor would go up to the temple site and would inspect the ruins and plan for the work which, declared he, "should begin as soon as possible."

The governor's message created a great stir throughout the city, and at the appointed hour on the next day when Zerubbabel, the governor, and Joshua, the high priest, and Haggai reached the temple ruins they found all the city come together to see what the governor would do. Some devout hearts there were who waited reverently, others were there out of curiosity, while the great majority were unsympathetic if not hostile, and declared that it was worse than folly for the governor to attempt the task of rebuilding.

"Was not the work stopped 14 years ago by decree of King Artaxerxes?" they asked. "And who is there who dares to again take up the work?"

Zerubbabel had spoken and then Haggai had repeated the message which God had given him, and as his voice ceased a great fear fell upon the people, and their murmurs ceased.

And then the religious wave of sentiment was swept back by the returning wave of doubt, and the people cried out.

"How can it be done? Our enemies about will again trouble us. We remember the persecutions which arose against us, and of the final decree of the king which put a stop to the work. And now, how dare we begin a work which will bring down upon our heads the hatred and opposition of the Samaritans?"

Zerubbabel and Joshua and Haggai watched the struggle between the hopes and doubts of the people and then Haggai stepped forward and lifting his voice so that all in that great assembly could hear he shouted: "Thus saith the Lord, I am with you."

As the inspiration of that thought gripped the hearts of the people they shouted back: "And with his help we will."

One Who Has Been Tried.

Once Charles Kingsley asked Turner how he came to paint his famous picture, "The Storm at Sea." Turner replied: "I painted it under the stimulus of a personal experience. I was, at my own desire, lashed to the mast of a ship in a gale off the coast of Holland that I might study every incident in detail." It is the man or the woman who has gone through trials that can understand and sympthize most truly with those in similar plight. He who was tempted like as we were, yet without sin, can aid us in our hour of strife with the tempter.—The Quiver.

SENTIMENT NEVER TOO OLD.

Girl Liked It, and Wanted It "Served Up in Bunches."

"Really," he said, "I am laboring under no inconsiderable embarrassment."

She inclined her head gravely.

"May I inquire the cause?" she asked.

"Yes. You see, I am really in love with you. I would like to propose, you know, but I cannot do it in any way that does not seem too old—too trite. I have thought of all the known ways, and have actually found myself laughing at myself. Yet I was never more serious in my life. Indeed, I may say that my whole existence—Ah, there I go again."

"It is hard," she murmured, sympathetically.

"The most difficult situation I was ever confronted with. If I didn't love you so much, you see, why, of course, it wouldn't matter. But I do! Life without you is an empty waste, a desert of Sahara, an aching void—Here I am once more!"

"I believe I have heard those words," she observed, sweetly.

"Of course. Everyone has. You see my difficulty. I simply must express myself. Why, my heart is so full of love that I can no longer remain silent. Your eyes follow me everywhere. Your lovely and entrancing form haunts me in my dreams. O, my dear—Hang it all; I simply can't help it."

She looked at him bewitchingly.

"Don't," she whispered. "I can stand it. Tell me that I am the apple of your eye. Call me darling and pet and lovey dovey. Say that from the moment you first looked into my eyes you loved me with an endearing love, a passion that burns and sizzles and melts. Tell me that heaven lies in my smile, that all other girls are as nothing, that you think only of me night and day, that I am your honey and sweetheart and you couldn't live a moment without me. Say that my presence haunts you, that your love grows stronger every moment, that nothing shall ever part us, shall it, my darling? That you tremble when you think of how much you love me, and that the azure depths of my eyes contain all heaven for you. It may be as old as the hills, but I like it. I have heard it all before, but it suits me. I know I'll never get tired of it."

He clasped her fiercely in his strong arms.

"Do you really mean that?" he whispered. "Isn't it honestly too old?"

"Too old!" she murmured. "Why, don't you know, that is the only new thing in all the world?"—Life.

Manitoba's Many Lakes.

Of the lakes of Manitoba, Lake Winnipeg is the largest, being 275 miles long, and from forty to sixty miles wide; its area being about 9,000 square miles, and its total coast line longer than that of any of the great lakes, except Lake Superior. No other province or state has entirely within its boundaries a body of water at all approaching it in magnitude. Great Salt lake, in Utah, in only one-fifth of the extent of Lake Winnipeg. The largest of its tributaries is the Saskatchewan river, one of the four great rivers of the continent east of the continental divide; its total length is 1,090 miles. The Red river, 700 miles in length, and the Winnipeg river, 300 miles in length, and many minor rivers also pour into Lake Winnipeg. The Nelson river is its principal outlet, and connects it with Hudson bay.

Apples Used as Perfume.

Tempting-looking apples exhibited at the entrance to the dining-room in the Hotel Knickerbocker and imported direct from France, are the Pomme Reinette or Little Queen apples. They are pale yellow and sweet, and said to be particularly pleasing to foreigners who prefer them to the tarter apples prized by Americans. Said a waiter: "Country women at home put these apples in the linen closets and chests to perfume the linen. One apple will scent a whole room."—New York Herald

Laughter in the Court.

An old plasterer is called upon to give evidence for the plaintiff. Counsel for the defense tries to bully him. "Have you ever been in prison?" "Yes, twice." "Ah! how long the first time?" "I was sent to prison to whitewash a cell to accommodate a lawyer who had cheated one of his clients."

Ask Her This Question

"Do you know of any woman who ever received any benefit from taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound?"

If any woman who is suffering with any ailment peculiar to her sex will ask her neighbors this question, she will be surprised at the result. There is hardly a community in this country where women cannot be found who have been restored to health by this famous old remedy, made exclusively from a simple formula of roots and herbs.

During the past 30 years we have published thousands of letters from these grateful women who have been cured by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and never in all that time have we published a testimonial without the writer's special permission. Never have we knowingly published a testimonial that was not truthful and genuine. Here is one just received a few days ago. If anyone doubts that this is a true and honest statement of a woman's experience with Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound write and ask her.

Houston, Texas.—"When I first began taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound I was a total wreck. I had been sick for three years with female troubles, chronic dyspepsia, and a liver trouble. I had tried several doctor's medicines, but nothing did me any good.

"For three years I lived on medicines and thought I would never get well, when I read an advertisment of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and was advised to try it.

"My husband got me one bottle of the Compound, and it did me so much good I continued its use. I am now a well woman and enjoy the best of health.

"I advise all women suffering from such troubles to give Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound a trial. They won't regret it, for it will surely cure you."—Mrs. Bessie L. Hicks, 819 Cleveland St., Houston.

Any woman who is sick and suffering is foolish surely not to give such a medicine as this a trial. Why should it not do her as much good as it did Mrs. Hicks.

As an evidence of the obscurity of Abraham Lincoln's birth and early days, Major D. W. Sanders, a Louisville attorney, has addressed a letter to President Roosevelt, telling him that when he speaks in Larue county on February 12 at the supposed birthplace of Lincoln, he will be speaking many miles away from the place where Lincoln was born. Major Sanders contends that Lincoln was born in Washington County, Ky., near Springfield. It is a matter of record that Thos. Lincoln and Nancy Hanks were granted a license to marry at Springfield. According to the best authorities the couple moved into the section now Larue county and there the emancipator was born.

At its session last week the fiscal court made a levy of 15 cents on each $100 worth of taxable property in the county and a per-capita tax of 50 cents, to meet the appropriation asked for by the county board of education. This is a stater under the new law which it is said will inaugurate a new era in Kentucky in educational matters. The taxpayers will realize this fall that their taxes have been growing, but the time has come when good roads and good schools are demanded by the age in which you are living, and to secure them requires money and a considerable sum of it.

SOME INTEREST

Is Being Taken Among the Friends of the Several Candidates.

There May Be a Big Change in the Standing of the Candidates Next Week.

Miss Sadie Crisler drops to third position with Miss Josie Madden not far behind her. Good work on the part of the contestants during the coming week might result a in very great change in the positions. TOBACCO NOTES.

Danville.—Farmers of Boyle, Lincoln, Washington, Mercer, Garrard and Jessamine counties are preparing to plant the greatest acreage of tobacco the coming season that has ever been grown in these counties.

Carlisle—A great acreage of land has been plowed, most of which will be put in tobacco. On some farms crops of from 50 to 100 acres of tobacco will be raised. There is no doubt judging from the statement of farmers who gather here that, with favorable seasons, the largest acreage of tobacco will be raised in Nicholas county this year than ever before in her history.

Lexington.—Much of the sod land that will be put in tobacco has been broken and is now mellowing in the sun and freezes. As the time for the burning of tobacco beds draws near reports that a large crop will be planted are confirmed. Many tracts of land have been rented at a high price per acre, and it is said that if good prices are not realized for the crops these high priced tracts will entail a loss to the renter.

Sharpsburg.—Some virgin soil has been plowed and it is expected to raise a fine crop of Burley. It is now a settled fact that every acre will be planted in this county that can be safely housed. High prices are being paid for rented ground. The weather being favorable the plant beds will be sown the last of the month. A number of farmers will raise the weed this season who never have grown it in former years.

Mt. Sterling.—The tobacco growers of the county are all in good humor now, and extensive preparations are being made for an immense crop the coming summer. As the weather moderates all farmers will again begin breaking the soil and getting it ready. Many tobacco beds have been burned and from present indications the crop in Montgomery county will be the largest ever put out, every available acre being used.

[Shelby Record.]

Tobacco growers should listen to reason. There will doubtless be a large crop grown this year, maybe too much. Tobacco is high and growers feel encouraged to raise all they can because of that fact. They should stop a moment and remember two things, one of which is that supply and demand cuts a figure, and that quality counts for more, in the long run, than quantity. The cutting out of the 1908 crop made it possible for the Tobacco Association to get the price it asked, but it did more than that. Tobacco that was not in the pool has brought and is bringing as good or better prices than the poolers got. The manufacturers needed "the weed," and there was not as much in sight as there usually is. The price soared and it is still up and will remain up unless the growers "overdo" the culture of it in the future. There is much more profit in one thousand pounds of "good" tobacco at 15 cents than there is in fifteen hundred pounds of ten-cent "trash," either of which may be raised on the same amount of land. Make your tobacco good and remember that the same number of pounds raised without the use of Paris Green will sell for more money than you can get for that on which the poison is used, and that the buyers can easily tell the difference.

R. K. McManama, well known in this county, was married, one day last week, to Mrs. Katie Parsons, of Covington. The groom is 76 and the bride 63 years of age.

It means something more than a gold watch to be voted the most popular lady school teacher in Boone county. Who would not prize that honor greatly?

Waller Campbell of Latonia, and Harry Passons, of Illinois, spent a few days the past week in Burlington and vicinity. He reports the Boone county people in Latonia all well.

Doc Mannin, of Hebron, was among the visitors to this office last Thursday. Mr. Mannin has installed a box on rural route No. 3 and is now having his mail delivered at his door.

There is nearly always an ice harvest during the month of February, consequently it will be well enough to put your ice houses in order and be ready to fill upon the first opportunity.

John R. Whitson, of Florence, called on the RECORDER last Friday. Col. Whitson reported his town in a thriving condition and everybody who had a good supply of fuel happy as larks in May.

Henry Adams, who had been employed for some time past by a railroad in North Carolina, passed a civil service examination, is now in Washington, where he landed a good government position.

The reflection from the big fire in Covington, last Thursday night was seen plainly by many of the citizens of Burlington, many of whom located the fire in Covington, while others thought it was in Cincinnati.

T. J. Griffith, of Verona, whose visits to this part of the county are few and far between, was a pleasant caller at this office, one day last week. Mr. Griffith is one of the financial pillars in his part of the county.

W. R. Rouse, of Hebron, came in last week and gave the office machinery an inspection. The more intricate the machine the more interesting it is to Mr. Rouse, who has had considerable to do with various kinds of machines.

C. W. Waller, of Verona, was in Burlington, one day last week, and made this office a call. He was well ladened with Farmers' Institute literature, which left the impression that he is preparing to deliver a lecture on agriculture at some point in the county at an early date.

A large number of sample copies of the RECORDER has been mailed to nonsubscribers this week, who are asked to inspect the paper, decide that they would like to have it visit them once a week for a year, and then send in the subscription price, $1.50 and vote for some lady in the teachers' popularity contest.

The Farmers' Institute of Boone county will meet in Burlington, next Saturday, 1:30 p. m., for the purpose of selecting two delegates to attend the State Institute which meets at Elizabethtown, Hardin county. A good attendance is very much desired.

D. B DOBBINS,
President of Boone County Farmers Institute.

J. F. Cason, of Independence, Kenton county, called at this office, one day last week, enroute home from the bedside of his daughter, Mrs. Blanton Pope, who has typhoid fever, and who, it is a pleasure to say, is doing nicely. Mr. Cason has bought and moved to a farm near Independence, having tired of the grocery business in which he had been engaged in Covington for several years.

The razing of the slaughter house just out side of the northern limits of the town, is causing rejoicing on the part of the citizens in that neighborhood, as during the summer months the odors wafted therefrom by the breezes riveled those of neither the geranium nor the tuberose in the matter of fragrance. The lot on which the building stood will be cultivated in tobacco this season.

(Williamstown Courier.)

A Courier representative overheard a squad of farmers talking the other day, and from the conversation is led to believe that a majority of them will plant a large acreage in corn, and not try to raise as much tobacco as some have claimed they would. This is good news and we are glad the farmers of Grant county have decided not to "overdo it" as regards the tobacco crop. It would be well for the farmers in all tobacco growing counties to adopt the same plan.

Mrs. Susan Acra, widow of the late Madison Acra, died last Saturday night at the home of her daughter, Mrs. William Clore, in Locust Grove neighborhood, after a painful illness of rheumatism. The remains were interred last Monday in the family cemetery on the old homestead. Mrs. Acra was born November 23, 1816, and was a kind hearted lady, with energy unsurpassed. She leaves two sons, Jas. and Milton and three daughters, Mrs. J. M. Barlow, Mrs. William Clore and Miss Bettie, to mourn her death.

J. E. Rouse, of Payne's Depot, Scott county, visited his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Geo. E. Rouse, of Limaburg neighborhood, last week, and spent a day with his brother-in-law, L. H. Conner, near town. Mr. Rouse has been farming extensively in Fayette county many years and has made considerable money, which he desires to invest in land, and talks of going to Texas, which State he thinks offers the best opportunity for investors. He is well pleased with the country where he is living, but regards the price of land there too high to invest in, when as fine land can be bought in so many places at a much less price.

A few evenings since as the writer was approaching his office, he was hailed by bright little Katharine Kelly, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. E. E. Kelly, who presented him with a paper saying, "Mr. Riddell, here is an old paper papa sent you." Upon examination the paper was found to be a copy of the RECORDER of November 20th, 1879. There are many items of interest in this old paper. Among the business men who were patronizing the RECORDER'S advertising columns away back there, and who are still in the swim, are J. C. Wiles, Lawrenceburg; Dr. J. M. Grant, Petersburg; F. W. Kassabaum, Aurora. All the others have retired from the business they pursued 30 years ago, and many of them are dwellers in the celestial city.

Dr. R. L. Finnell, of Verona, was in town several days last week, and made the RECORDER a brief call. Dr. Finnell is one of the oldest members of the medical profession in this county, and has traveled miles enough visiting patients to encircle the earth several times. He has been trying to quit the practice for several years, but is of a disposition that when a fellowman is suffering and calls him, he cannot say no, and for that reason he will be in the practice to a considerable extent so long as he lives and is able to answer a summons. For over 35 years he has traveled the dirt roads in and around the Verona neighborhood, and now in his old days good roads have come, lessening very considerably the burden of the practice of medicine in his bailiwick.

EFFECTIVE RECIPE.

Home-Made Kidney, Bladder and Rheumatism Medicine for Readers.

Here is a simple home-made mixture as given by an eminent authority on Kidney diseases, who makes the statement that it will relieve almost any case of Kidney trouble if taken before the stage of Bright's disease. He states that such symptoms as lame back, pain in the side, frequent desire to urinate, especially at night; painful and discolored urination, are readily overcome. Here is the recipe. Try it:

These ingredients are all harmless and easily mixed at home by shaking well in a bottle. This mixture has a peculiar healing and soothing effect upon the entire Kidney and Urinary structure, and often overcomes the worst forms of Rheumatism in just a little while. This mixture is said to remove all blood disorders and cure Rheumatism by forcing the Kidneys to filter and strain from the blood and system all uric acid and foul, decomposed waste matter, which cause these afflictions. Try it if you aren't well. Save the prescription.

The blizzard that struck this part of the country last Friday evening and made Rome howl for 24 hours, was the most disagreeable period of bad weather experienced here in a long time. The mercury never went much lower than 8 degrees above zero, but the high wind that prevailed Friday night and Saturday made the temperature feel as though it was many degrees below, and man and beast exposed to it were soon chilled through. Snow was falling much of the time and the wind scurried it through every crack and crevice in buildings. The wind subsided Saturday night and Sunday and was not so cold, although not a pleasant day to be out by any means. The snow drifted considerably in some places.

The fifty men summoned, from which to select the jury in the Griffith lunacy inquest, were in town on time, last Thursday, and the work of securing the jury began about 10 o'clock. By noon the jury had been selected after nearly all the fifty men had been examined as to their competency. The jury as accepted was composed of the following gentlemen:

Jacob W. Rouse, Limaburg;
H. L. Tanner, Hebron;
Jacob Lodge, Hebron;
Henry Aylor, Hebron;
Chas. Garnett, Limaburg;
Israel Rouse, Limaburg;
Clayton Walton, Pt. Pleasant;
George Bradford, Pt. Pleasant;
R. W. Rouse, Limaburg;
Wallace Tanner, Florence;
Xen Scott, Commissary;
W. T. Ryle, Commissary.

The first nine jurors live in what might be termed the same neighborhood, while the last two occupy adjoining farms.

When court adjourned last Saturday afternoon it was until yesterday at 10 o'clock a. m., on account of Monday being county court day. The trial began on time promptly, Tuesday, and it is thought the jury will get the case some time today. A large number of witnesses have testified. Considerable feeling has been manifested by the attorneys engaged and there is an occasional spat between them which varies the monotony of the proceedings. It is the longest lunacy inquiry ever held in the county, and has created an interest in every neighborhood in the county.

The RECORDER is under obligations to W. G. Kite, of Waterloo, for the prompt manner in which he complied with a request made of him; also to E. E. Kelly, of Burlington, for same reason, his mission being along the same line.

An Important Mission.

The Seneca, the first boat ever built for the purpose of destroying derelicts, was recently commissioned by the United States revenue cutter service, and sent on its mission. The derelicts which the crew of the vessel is to destroy are ships abandoned at sea. Such wrecks are one of the greatest perils that confront the navigator. They are usually so water-logged that they float even with the surface, cannot be easily distinguished in the daylight, and are unseen at night. A steamship colliding with such a wreck is always seriously injured, sometimes so badly that it sinks with all on board. The derelicts have been blown up from time to time by private ship-owners and by the government, but hereafter, says the Youth's Companion, the Seneca will devote itself to this work in that part of the Atlantic between Portland, Me., and Charleston, S. C., and the Bermudas and Sable Island. Masters of vessels are asked to report to the Maritime Exchange in New York or Philadelphia, or to the Chamber of Commerce in Boston or Baltimore when they see any derelicts, giving the latitude and longitude and the direction of the wind and sea. The commander of the Seneca will receive these reports by wireless telegraph or otherwise, and search for the wreck. When it is found, it will be blown up with guncotton or some other explosive. Masters of vessels may also call the Seneca by the wireless telegraph and notify it directly when a derelict is seen; or if they are in distress from any cause they may also summon the vessel, which is equipped with means for giving assistance to ships in need.

The whole matter of tipping is wrong. The man who is compelled to give is insulted and the man who is asked to receive is insulted, whether he knows it or not. It may never be possible to correct the evil of tipping by legislative enactments, but it can be curtailed by individual habit. The sentiment against it is growing, says the Washington Post. People will continue to make small presents to faithful servants as long as some men are born to serve and some to be served, but the time is coming when they will do so only through choice and not from compulsion. The porter, like the waiter and the barber and the hackman, has been led to look upon the tip as his right, and one to play or fight for. In the revulsion of feeling which has come over the public because of the growing demands for tips on the part of the serving classes, the porter must suffer with his fellows.

The fur trade, once the principal industry of the great northwest, still holds an important place. And it is also up to date. In earlier times furs were brought to market mainly by human carriers and dog teams. Now modern improvements are utilized. The story from Winnipeg that a steamer of the Hudson Bay Company has been wrecked in the bay, and that a cargo of furs worth $1,500,000 has been lost, signifies the magnitude of the business done and the extent of the disaster, and also the methods now employed. The daring adventurers of the early part of last century never dreamed of running steamboats for such purposes.

Recently the Youth's Companion published a story in which a surveyor wrote to a map-publisher that "Sugar creek has entirely disappeared and may be erased from the map." The surveyor adds: "Should it appear at any time I will let you know." A real prospector writes that this is no joke to the man who travels in the arid lands; for springs do disappear and reappear. He tells of two men who died in the Death valley region because they relied on a map that had not been corrected. "Sugar creek" had gone dry and had not been "erased from the map."

Prof. Ferrero, the Italian historian, who has been giving lectures on Rome in Boston, says that America is a truer heir to the Roman republic than any European nation; that Rome taught the world the principles of commonwealth on a large scale, which only the United States is vast enough to realize. Dr. Ferrero is not pessimistic enough to press the parallel to uncomfortable conclusions, remarks the Youth's Companion, but he sees in our imperialism, our wealth and our powerful women some resemblance to a grandeur that declined although it never died.

A woman in Chicago, three times divorced, tells her sisters not to marry, as the idea is ridiculous of tying oneself to the wreckes, men being merely incidental. But this is a case in which each individual wants her own experience of the absurdity of the matter, and not that of one who, for all her energetic denunciation, was not satisfied with one experience herself.

France may yet be reduced to such straits that in self-defense it will have to adopt all the orphans in the world.

CUBANS TAKE REINS

GEN. GOMEZ IS INAUGURATED AS ISLAND'S PRESIDENT.

GOV. MAGOON STEPS OUT

Havana.—Cuba formally passed back into the hands of the Cubans at noon Thursday, when the new government, headed by President Gomez and Vice-President Zayas was inaugurated.

The ceremonies were simple. Gen. Gomez took the oath from the chief justice of the supreme court and made a brief address to the populace from the balcony of the palace. Afterward in the reception room of the palace Gov. Magoon read the order of President Roosevelt restoring the island and its affairs to the newly elected government.

City Is Carnival Scene.

The coming of this new day of Cuban liberty was signaled by a general display of fireworks, the velvet blackness of the tropical midnight being set aflame by screeching rockets and bombs which sent down showers of golden rain and gleaming, varicolored lights. The streets of the city, which were brilliantly illuminated and garlanded with chains of incandescent bulbs, were thronged and a carnival spirit everywhere prevailed. Thousands of people gathered around the Clerks' club throughout the night, where inaugural and farewell balls were held jointly in honor of President Gomez and Vice-President Zayas and Gov. Magoon, all three of whom were quickly recognized on entering the building and leaving it, and loudly applauded. The balls constituted one of the most brilliant functions held here since the days of the Spanish occupation.

Illumination and Ball.

The festivities really opened Wednesday night with a brilliant illumination of the city and a farewell ball tendered by the mayor and council of Havana in honor of Gov. Magoon, President-elect Gomez, Vice-President-elect Zayas and the American officers who served as provisional authorities.

The illuminations probably were the most elaborate ever seen here. The money provided for the purpose was subscribed unstintedly, and the parks and the principal thoroughfares of the city were transformed into a veritable fairyland. In Central park, stretching down the Prado to the sea, thousands of vari-colored bulbs gleamed among cocoanut palms and laurel trees.

Ball a Brilliant Affair.

The ball was a brilliant function. It was attended by the American officials, the new island authorities, members of the diplomatic corps, special ambassadors and leaders of society. It was held in the large and beautiful ball room of the Circlo Dependientes, or Clerks' club, which is a unique organization with the enormous membership of 24,000. The club building, which faces an entire block, is a palace. The hall was held last night rather than this evening, after the inauguration, because of the determination of the American officials to leave for home immediately following President Gomez's induction into office.

President Sees Success.

Washington. — A message expressing hope for Cuba's success was sent by President Roosevelt to the president and congress of the republic of Cuba Thursday. It follows:

"Gov. Magoon will, by direction, turn over to you, on the 28th of this month, the control and government of the island of Cuba, and he will thereupon declare the provisional administration of the affairs of the island by the United States to be at an end. Upon the occasion of this final act, I desire to reiterate to you the sincere friendship and good wishes of the United States, and our most earnest hopes for the stability and success of your government. Our fondest hope is that you may enjoy the blessings of peace, justice, prosperity and orderly liberty, and that the friendship which has existed between the republic of the United States and the republic of Cuba may continue for all time to come."

Oregon Vote Finally Arrives.

IN FIVE DECADES

RAILROADS HAVE MADE WONDERFUL STRIDES.

Changes Are Shown by Comparisons Which Are Really Humorous—One Line That Could Not Afford a Clock.

It would seem a far cry between a period when a railroad corporation would order $1,600,000 worth of passenger equipment, apparently with no more concern than would be displayed by the ordinary individual in buying a loaf of bread, and the time when that same road could not afford a clock by which to run its trains, says the Chicago Evening Post. But this span in the affairs of the Rock Island system is covered by the service of a man who still is on its pay roll.

Readers of newspapers noticed a report a few days ago that the Rock Island had ordered new locomotives and passenger cars to cost $1,600,000. The contrast was presented by an old document which was unearthed from the records in the form of an advertisement of the establishment of service by the Chicago & Rock Island railroad between Chicago and La Salle, Ill., a distance of 100 miles, all of the system then in operation. And this was only 55 years ago, or in 1853.

It was this advertisement that gave away the secret about the inability of the road to furnish its own clock for operating purposes. At least it is taken to indicate that near approach to poverty, for the trains were run by a clock in a store located two miles from the station.

The man still in the employ of the Rock Island who personally remembers the beginning of this service is E. H. Whited, now cashier in the La Salle station ticket office, Chicago. Then 17 years old, he went to the station at Blue Island with his father to see the train go through. About nine months later he entered the employ of the Rock Island, and still remains.

Mr. Whited tells many incidents concerning early railroading, but about the most interesting anecdote regarding the first trip of the trains announced in the foregoing advertisement concerns the actions of the farmers at Bremen, now Tinley Park, about 25 miles from Chicago.

The people of that neighborhood had insisted that the train stop there, so they might look at it, but they were informed no stop would be made. Determined not to be thwarted in their sight-seeing purpose, the people gathered at Bremen and built a fence across the tracks. It was simply an old-fashioned worm-rail fence, but it took the train crew long enough to remove the obstruction to give the gathered curious ones time to get a good look at the train.

Some wonderful contrasts are indicated by the opening paragraph of this narrative. In 1853 the passenger train equipment was primitive. Instead of all-steel cars, electric-lighted, ventilated and supplied with the latest coupling and spring devices, as is the case with this latest order of the Rock Island, the old coach was of wood, oil lamps were used, the coaches were without ventilation when the weather was too cold to have the windows open and there was little attention to the springs and coupling devices. In fact, the old link couplers were used, and starting trains thus coupled usually was accompanied by considerable shaking up for the passengers. Then, too, the light construction of cars made riding a pretty rough proposition.

The system also has grown from its 100 miles into the Rock Island-Frisco-Chicago and Eastern Illinois family, having upward of 14,000 miles of road, and the pay roll has increased from some 300 names to about 65,000. But the prediction of the active railroad man is that another half century will find to-day's methods just as crude in comparison as were those of 1853.

Railroad Instruction Train.

The Pennsylvania railroad recently sent out an instruction train for a three days' trip through eastern Pennsylvania, to deliver free lectures to the farmers along the line. The lecturers were members of the faculty of the State College of Agriculture. The three coaches of the train were fitted up as lecture rooms, and at each of the 22 stops 45 minute talks were made. Besides lectures on increasing the fertility of the soil, there were discourses on methods for increasing the output of dairy products, the care of live stock, testing seed corn and the cultivation of alfalfa.—Scientific merican.

Metal Sleepers in India.

It is understood that metal sleepers of cast iron box form have been tried on the Oudh & Rohilkhand railway, half a mile of track having been laid on them in vicinity of the Lucknow station, when F. D. Fowler, whose invention they were, was engineer-in-chief of that line. These sleepers are about the same weight as the Indian Midland railroad cast iron pots, and believed to be as strong. It is practically the same shape as a timber sleeper, which is more easily packed than any other, and, it is claimed, is free from the defects of other metal sleepers.

Old Railroad Carriages.

Before 1850 most English railway carriage had only four wheels and weighed ten tons. From 1830 to 1890 they had six wheels and weighed 15 to 16 tons; from 1890 to 1900 they had eight wheels and weighed 24 tons; and since 1900 the fashion is 12 wheels for dining and sleeping cars and the weight 35 to 42 tons.

LASHED TO A GREAT ICE CAKE

Milwaukee, Wis., Feb. 1.—The most thrilling tale of hardship of the winter comes from Sturgeon bay, Wis., where nine fishermen were rescued after being exposed for two days to the fury of last week's blizzard, and who were nearly dead when rescued miles from shore, from the ice floe on which they had drifted out into the open lake.

Four of their number had been frozen stiff and the others were fast losing consciousness, after having abandoned hope, when they were rescued.

When picked up it was found that the men had lashed themselves with their fishing lines to the ice to keep from being washed into the lake by the heavy waves.

The men were fishing with small sleds on the ice off Chambers island when the storm came upon them. They did not notice the blizzard approach until they found that a cake of ice was drifting out into the lake with them. They tried to shout to the shore, all yelling at once, but they were not sure that they had made any one hear. One lone fisherman, however, was on another piece of ice which had not drifted away. The fisherman notified Capt. Ducion, the keeper of the Eagle Point light, who got out his tender and started for their rescue, despite the danger to himself and crew.

Car Ferry No. 15, of the Pere Marquette line, which arrived at a late hour Saturday night, had one of the worst trips ever experienced by Capt. McIsaacs in his long service on the lakes. It took 55 hours to cross the lake during the storm, which usually takes 12 hours to make the trip.

The crew of 45 men are completely worn out by the hard work. Much of the time was spent in beating up and down in a course of about 25 miles outside of Milwaukee harbor.

MONSTER LION

Was Devouring Boy When Mother Returned To Her Home.

Balboa, Cal., Feb. 1.—Her two-year-old boy killed and his body terribly mutilated by a monster mountain lion, and the fierce beast devouring one of his legs which it had torn from its socket, was the sight that Mrs. Chris. Brown beheld when she entered the family tent, four miles from the Hotel Del Mar, after a short walk.

When the mother had realized what had taken place she screamed and almost threw herself on the lion, which growled savagely and backed slowly out of the rear of the tent, carrying a mouthful of flesh in its teeth, and disappeared.

The Browns arrived from Delaware two weeks ago.

Flames Destroy Business Section.

Pensacola, Fla., Feb. 1.—The town of Milton, 30 miles east of Pensacola, was practically wiped off the map by fire Sunday, the entire business section and several residences being destroyed. The total loss is estimated at between $250,000 and $300,000. The two banks, the city hall, Waldorf hotel, Santa Rosa Star building, two livery stables and a dozen stores were destroyed. A strong northwest wind fanned the flames and soon the business houses had been consumed. The fire was making progress in the residence district when a special train with Pensacola fire fighters reached the scene.

Charlotte, N. C., Feb. 1.—Enraged because she would not return with him to Georgia or surrender their 17-months-old child, Edward A. Mizer, of Atlanta, Ga., intercepted his young wife in a fashionable street of Wilmington, N. C., Sunday and shot her twice and then killed himself. Mrs. Mizer died two hours later.

Burglars Start Big Fire.

Gananoque, Ontario, Feb. 1.—Fire destroyed the Turner block here Sunday, causing a loss of $110,000. The Grand Opera House, erected a year ago at a cost of $30,000, also was destroyed. It is supposed that burglars who robbed an adjacent jewelry store set fire to the block to distract suspicion.

Tourists Had Narrow Escape.

Mexico City, Feb. 1.—Fire destroyed the city hall, the Hotel Pasje and two blocks of business houses and dwellings here Sunday. In the Hotel Pasej, 60 American tourists escaped with only the clothes they wore. No lives were lost.

Means Business.

Constantinople, Feb. 1.—The grand vizier, Kiamil Pasha, Sunday, dispatched to Sofia an energetic note demanding to know definitely whether Bulgaria intends to resume negotiations.

Hanover, Germany, Feb. 1.—Socialist demonstrations held here Sunday in protest against the Prussian election laws resulted in a collision between the socialists and the police, in which 20 or 30 persons were wounded.

AWFUL GRAVEL ATTACKS

Cured by Doan's Kidney Pills After Years of Suffering.

F. A. Rippy, Depot Ave., Gallatin, Tenn., says: "Fifteen years ago kidney disease attacked me. The pain in my back was so agonizing I finally had to give up work. Then came terrible attacks of gravel with acute pain and passages of blood. In all I passed 25 stones, some as large as a bean. Nine years of this ran me down to a state of continual weakness, and I thought I never would be better until I began using Doan's Kidney Pills. The improvement was rapid, and since using four boxes I am cured and have never had any return of the trouble."

What His Wife Gave Him.

The boss builder was standing on the edge of the great cavity at Thirty-fourth street that they have been digging for the past few years, when an Irishman walked toward him.

"Look here," he said. "Didn't I fire you yesterday?"

"Yes," said the Irishman, "and I don't want you to do it again, either. My wife gave me the devil about it when I got home."—New York Times.

Willing to Take a Chance.

The other evening a particularly woe-begone and souseful looking person stopped James J. Buckley on East Sixth street.

"Gimme a dime for a bed, won't you, mister?" asked the stranger in that half whisper they always use.

Buckley looked at him for a minute thoughtfully. "Well," says he, seriously, "hring the hed around and if I think it's worth the price I'll give you a dime for it, of course."—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

Cause for Complaint.

Jones, the dairyman, loved his little bouts occasionally, and at such times celebrated riotously. He was prevailed upon to sign the pledge, and this piece of news was given wide publicity. But in a few weeks Jones turned upon his temperance friends and again sought old-time friends and acquaintances.

"The idea!" grieved Jones, as he told the waiter to duplicate an order. "Me driving a milk wagon, and those fellows advertising that I am on the water wagon!"—Judge.

A pause.

"Gwenny."

"Yes."

"May I drop the final 'g' in egg?"

DIDN'T KNOW

Coffee Was the Cause.

Many daily habits, particularly of eating and drinking, are formed by following our elders.

In this way ill health is often fastened upon children. A Ga. lady says:

"I had been allowed to drink coffee ever since I could remember, but even as a child I had a weak stomach, which frequently refused to retain food.

"The taste of coffee was in my mouth all the time and was, as I found out later, the cause of the stomach rebelling against food.

"I now see that it was only from following the example of my elders that I formed and continued the miserable habit of drinking coffee. My digestion remained poor, nerves unstrung, frequent headache, and yet I did not suspect the true cause.

"Another trouble was a bad, muddy complexion for which I spent time and money for creams, massaging, etc., without any results.

"After I was married I was asked to try Postum, and would you believe it, I, an old coffee toper, took to Postum from the very first. We made it right—according to directions on the pkg., and it had a most delicate flavor, and I at once quit coffee, with the happiest results.

"I now have a perfectly clear, smooth skin, fine digestion and haven't had a headache in over two years."

"There's a Reason."

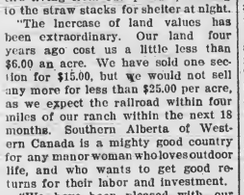
"SOUTHERN ALBERTA IS A MIGHTY GOOD COUNTRY."

No stronger or better evidence can be given of the merits of a country than that which comes from the testimony of the settler who has determined to succeed. This is why we reproduce the following letter, which speaks for itself. These people were induced to go to Western Canada through the solicitation of a Canadian Government agent, who secured for them the low railway rates.

"Carmangay, Alta., Canada, 12-15-'08.

"Mr. C. J. Broughton, Canadian Government Agency, 135 Adams Street, Chicago: We had audacity enough to tackle the proposition of buying four sections of land in Southern Alberta, thirty miles east of Clairholm and heading up on the Little Bow, and our two boys each got a homestead adjoining. We fenced three sections and the two homesteads, and built a house, barn, corrals and granary, and have since enlarged some of these buildings. We have broken 200 acres of land, which has been sowed to oats and wheat. During the severe winter of two years ago the winter wheat killed out somewhat, and our crop yielded only ten bushels to the acre, but the spring wheat went 24 bushels to the acre. In this country we must be prepared for storms and cold, at times 20 to 30 below zero, yet on the whole the winters are mild; and while there are exceptional crops, it is fair to say that the average farmer can depend on having a yield in average years of from 20 to 25 bushels to the acre for spring wheat; and winter wheat in our immediate neighborhood yields from 25 to 30 bushels to the acre on the average.



We have now quite a bunch of horses, over 50 in all, about 350 sheep, after having sold 140 for mutton this fall. We have 20 head of pure bred registered Shropshire, which are worth $20 each. The average price received for mutton sheep was $5.00 and a little over. Pork brings 5 and 6 cents a pound. We have about 30 head of cattle on our ranch now, and last winter they picked their entire living from our pasture, running to the straw stacks for shelter at night.

"The increase of land values has been extraordinary. Our land four years ago cost us a little less than $6.00 an acre. We have sold one section for $15.00, but we would not sell any more for less than $25.00 per acre, as we expect the railroad within four miles of our ranch within the next 18 months. Southern Alberta of Western Canada is a mighty good country for any manor woman who loves outdoor life, and who wants to get good returns for their labor and investment.

"We have been pleased with our treatment from the Canadian Government, and can heartily commend Southern Alberta as a splendid country in which to locate.

"Yours very truly,
(Signed)
"JAMES S. AINSLIE AND SONS."

A PREMONITION!

PLACE BLAME ON EACH OTHER

OWNERS OF THE REPUBLIC AND FLORIDA FILE SUITS.

Former Claim $2,000,000—Bids Are Opened for a Wireless Tower at Washington.

New York.—Just which ship was responsible for the Nantucket collision in which the White Star liner Republic and the Italian liner Florida figured, and which company shall pay the damages will be decided by the court of admiralty.

Both companies filed suits Thursday. That of the owners of the Republic claimed damages of $2,000,000 and recited in legal form the story of the marvelous sea disaster. The blame for the collision was placed on the Florida and the claim made that the last-named ship was going ahead at "an immoderate rate of speed" when the crash came.

The owners of the Florida also filed a libel suit and a petition for a limitation of liability against the Florida. The petitioners asked that their liability, in case the suits are decided against them, be placed at $224,000, the damage value of the Florida.

C. B. Richards & Co., agents for the Lloyd-Italian line, to which the Florida belongs, believe that Capt. Ruspini, his officers and crew should come in for some of the praise that has been bestowed upon the officers of the Republic. In a statement issued Thursday night they point out the heroism and the act of humanity displayed by Capt. Ruspini, who despite the fact that his ship was sorely damaged, stood by the Republic for more than 24 hours rescuing the passengers from the Republic and later transferring them to the Baltic when that ship reached the scene. The statement is made that had the Baltic not arrived, Capt. Ruspini would successfully have brought his overcrowded vessel into this port.

Washington.—Following the achievements of the wireless telegraph in the recent collision between the steamers Republic and Florida, the navy department Thursday opened bids for locating a wireless tower at Washington for communicating with ships at sea, to the distance of 3,000 miles.

F. P. GLAZIER IS FOUND GUILTY.

Ex-Treasurer of Michigan Convicted of Misappropriating State Funds.

Lansing, Mich.—Ex-State Treasurer Frank P. Glazier of Chelsea, whose failure in December, 1907, resulted in the closing of the Chelsea Savings bank, of which he was the head, and which had on deposit about $685,000 of state funds, was found guilty late Wednesday by a jury in the Ingham county circuit court of misappropriating state funds.

Mr. Glazier's attorneys immediately gave notice of an appeal to the supreme court, and he was released on $10,000 bail and given until March 8 to file a bill of exceptions and a motion for a new trial. He received the verdict without emotion.

ITCHED FOR TWELVE YEARS.

Eczema Made Hands and Feet Swell, Peel and Get Raw—Arms Affected, Too—Gave Up All Hope of Cure.

Quickly Cured by Cuticura.

"I suffered from eczema on my hands, arms and feet for about twelve years, my hands and feet would swell, sweat and itch, then would become callous and get very dry, then peel off and get raw. I tried most every kind of salve and ointment without success. I tried several doctors, but at last gave up thinking there was a cure for eczema. A friend of mine insisted on my trying the Cuticura Remedies, but I did not give them a trial until I got so bad that I had to do something. I secured a set and by the time they were used I could see a vast improvement and my hands and feet were healed up in no time. I have had no trouble since. Charles T. Bauer, Volant, Pa., Mar. 11, 1908."

"Sit down!" shouted the audience.

The Thespian Club gave a delightful program at the opera house, last Friday and Saturday nights, presenting the three act comedy, "Captain Racket," and the two act farce, "A Box of Monkeys," in a most pleasing manner. The caste of characters was represented by Chas. W. Ransler, Joseph Reed, Dr. B. W. Stallard, Ben Stansifer, Delvin Holder, Misses Myrtle Murphy, Zella Mayhugh, Elizabeth Bedinger and Pauline Curley. Their presentation of the respective characters was very praiseworthy and the audience was greatly pleased. The music, under the direction of Dr. J. G. Slater, was very entertaining, the orchestra being composed of Fred Miller, Robert Jones, Virgil Holder, Miss Georgia Carroll, Dr. H. C. Black, Harry Houston, Harry Dahling. The weather was inimicable to the attendance, a heavy snow storm prevailing, and the patronage was not as good as it otherwise would have been.

Owing to the inclement weather, last Friday and Saturday nights, preventing many from attending the dramatic entertainment, the Thespian Club has been prevailed upon repeating their entertainment Friday evening, February 5th, at popular prices. Pro. Gerard will take a prominent part in the show that is to be given in the opera house, Friday evening, February 5th, introducing several specialties between acts, and we feel no hesitancy in saying it will be well worth your money to come out and hear him. His solos are divine, and his power of imitation great. In fact there is nothing he cannot do with a violin. Come out, bring your friends, and hear a real "Virtuoso."

Have any of our readers seen a recent copy of the Cincinnati Weekly Enquirer? If not, it will pay to send for a copy, if for no other purpose than to note its present great worth as an educator in all things that tend to make life prosperous, and home, the happiest place on earth.

The editor by asking its readers to criticise and suggest improvements; and following advice thus obtained is enabled to produce a paper that exactly fits needs of a family and a material aid to father, mother and children in reaching that higher level in social life, where content and comfort reigns supreme.

Father obtains ample information that guides in the where, when and how to regulate and increase the income from his efforts. The mother in management of household affairs, practical economy, government of children, and other duties that makes her toil a labor of love. Children's minds and hearts are freed from thoughts of questionable amusements and frivolities of life, and encouraged to emulate all that is helpful in planing for a useful future in life.

The Grand Idea being that; "As are our Homes, so will be the Community, State and Nation."

A most desirable help, is a non-sectarian sermon each week, as preached by that Biblical Student Pastor Chas. T. Russell; a forcible reminder of the spiritual and temporal rewards gained by righteous living as preferable to a Godless life that brings nought but misery to the home.

We have often thought that it would be both helpful and profitable if we would take the time to sit quietly down and try to recall the opportunities which have presented themselves to us, in which we might have been helpful to some fellow being, and how many times we have neglected to take advantage of such opportunities. The rush and hurry of life leaves so few unoccupied moments in which to seriously take account of ourselves and our conduct towards our fellowmen, therefore, it is well and profitable sometimes to take ourselves to account and think of the wasted opportunities by use, of which, perhaps we might make some fellow creature happier, and may be better by some little act performed, some kind word spoken. These little things, which are so easily performed and are so often thoughtlessly neglected by us, are sometimes great blessings to those about us, and very greatly help to make life worth living. How few of us fully realize this truth? We will all have to give an account of our thoughtlessness and neglect.

In Memory of Mrs. Eliza Tanner.

Eliza A. Stephens was born October 5th, 1819, and died February 3rd, 1909. She was married in June, 1842, to Ebenezer Fisk, and December 14th, 1858, she married Richard Tanner. In 1836 she made the Good Confession under the preaching of Walter Scott, one of the pioneer preachers of the Restoration Movement, which began in the early part of the nineteenth century. She was the last of the charter members of the Florence Christian church. From a family of thirteen only two survive her, John Stephens, who is visiting relatives in Missouri, and Benjamin Stephens, who owns and lives at the old home on the pike above Florence. She leaves, also, four children, seven grand children and three great grandchildren, to mourn her departure.

For years Mrs. Tanner has lived in the past. She was not acquainted with the present world, but talked of things in the past. She knows more people in the other world than in this one. For years the tender hands of those who loved her have ministered to her wants. God blesses those with long lives who honor and respect their fathers and mothers.

Twin Troubles.

The other woman's burden always looks lighter than her own to Mrs. Trouble-in-Hand and to Mrs. Ditto. They occupy different social positions, but their woes are similar. Mrs. Trouble has one maid, and can never "entertain" or give her husband his favorite pie, because "one pair of hands can't do everything." Mrs. Ditto has six servants, and declares herself distracted by their quarrels and wastefulness, and ashamed to invite a guest to one of her helter-skelter meals. Mrs. Trouble thinks herself a martyr because she must stay at home. Mrs. Ditto fretfully complains that her husband's health compels her to travel. Mrs. Ditto finds her church work far too heavy for her strength, and Mrs. Trouble is sure that her minister looks down on her, because he never asks her to do anything. Finally, even in the shadow of death, Mrs. Trouble has no time to indulge her grief, and Mrs. Ditto has no other interests to distract her mind from hers. So, says the Youth's Companion, if we observe this queer, varied world in which we live, we learn to appreciate Milton's profound truth:

The mind is its own place, and in itself
Can make a heaven of hell, a hell of heaven.

Perhaps we can go a step further, and wonder if we are not pretty well off, after all.

Incidentally, it is interesting to note that the skill which enables one to detect a counterfeit comes not from a study of counterfeits, but from a thorough and conscientious familiarity with the genuine. If a man were pointed out to you and you were told that some day another who much resembled him would try to impose upon you, you would be pretty apt to fix his features in your mind; you would not spend any time looking at other people who looked something like him, would you? And the moment the impostor appeared you would note that in this, that or the other particular he failed to meet the details of the other man's face and figure. Just so it is in the detection of counterfeits, says the National Magazine. A skillful teller in a bank, counting money rapidly, will involuntarily throw out a note which in the slightest degree departs from the well-known pattern which is so strongly impressed on his mental vision. That involuntary act will nearly always prove to have been justified, for the bill in 19 cases out of 20 will prove to be counterfeit. It is because of this fact that when a request is received from some one to loan him a collection of counterfeits for the instruction of his cashiers, he is advised to have the young men study the genuine carefully, and there will be no trouble in detecting the bad notes.

Dr. James B. Angell, president of the University of Michigan, may regard himself as a standing refutation of Osslerism. President Angell, who has held his present position for 38 years, subject only to such absences as have been necessary by temporary assumption of other duties, is still a very active man, though he is 80 years old. He celebrated his birthday by attending and taking part in the annual convention of the Association of American Universities at Ithaca, where he was the guest of Hon. Andrew D. White, another splendid veteran. Dr. Angell says of himself that he was never in better shape physically and is feeling in tip-top condition, and he has every appearance of ruddy health. To-day he leaves for the west and in a few days will be back at his desk ready for energetic work. Constant usefulness and a high order of living seem to be the best recipes for health and longevity.

Some day not very far distant, it is hoped, exporters and importers in the United States will awaken to the realization that South America offers them exceptional business opportunities, and then probably a systematic and determined effort will be made to wrest from Europe the trade which, geographically speaking, belongs to us. Why this rich field has not been cultivated is one of the mysteries which for a decade has puzzled citizens who visited the continent to the south. Perhaps the explanation is that we have been too busy extending our trade to Europe and Asia, but whatever the cause, the time has passed when American merchants can any longer afford to ignore the possibilities apparent to the well informed.

The young king of Portugal has been warned of a deep-laid plot to depose him, which, after the terrible circumstances of his accession, he can take as no idle threat. Scarcely more than a boy, he is beginning soon to realize how uneasy lies the head that wears a crown.

"Why not make your own music?" asks the Washington Times. Because our neighbors prefer us to have our music made by some one who knows how. Silly question, that.

DEATH IN TORNADO

LOSS REACHES MILLIONS

Arkansas, Tennessee, Texas and Alabama in Path of Cyclone—Telegraph Communication Is Cut Off.

Louisville, Ky.—Death for nearly a score of people, losses of hundreds of thousands of dollars in property and the crippling of many telegraph wires resulted between noon and dusk Friday from a series of small cyclones and tornadoes which swept Dixie from the Tennessee line to the Texas panhandle. The storms were accompanied in most cases by hail, darkness and terrific lightning flashes and sheets of rain.

Most of the towns where the losses of life occurred are off the beaten track, so that news from them has been coming in but slowly. Known deaths thus far, however, are:

Stuttgart, Ark.—Mrs. Garfield and a child of Will Story, while Mrs. Story is reported fatally injured.

Sulphur Springs, Tex.—Mrs. James Ardis and Mrs. C. Caldwell.

Booth, Miss.—Six unidentified persons.

Rolling Fork, Miss.—Four unidentified persons.

Cullman, Ala.—Seven unidentified persons.

Vicinity of Montgomery, Ala.—Two unidentified persons.

From other towns, such as Ennis and Waxahachie, Tex., and Boscoe, La., many dwellings were said to have been demolished by the force of the wind.

Rice Fields Destroyed.

Arkansas and upper Louisiana rice fields were injured to the extent of many thousands of dollars, while the larger cities had rains and darkness illuminated by lightning bolts that made the atmosphere quiver.

About dusk Chattanooga was lost on the wire running south from Louisville via Nashville and has to be picked up from Memphis. The local operators heard the faint words: "Terrific storm here—black as night—hail falling," and then the sounders ceased to record. Knoxville was lost similarly shortly after that, but later both towns were looped in when conditions there ceased in violence.

In Louisville the entire day was dark and rainy, but there was no intimation of cyclone or of heavy wind.

More Deaths Reported.

Birmingham, Ala.—Reports received Friday night state that several persons were killed by a cyclone at Cullman, Ala., in the afternoon.

Texas Feels Storm.

Fort Worth, Tex.—A heavy rain and wind storm of tornado proportions, which swept over north Texas and southern Oklahoma Friday, resulted in considerable damage in several localities. At Ennis, Tex., a dozen residences were blown down. No loss of life has been reported. Waxahachie was also damaged by the tornado.

At Sulphur Springs the storm wrecked eight dwellings, and Mrs. James Ardis was seriously injured by flying glass. The total damage from the storm in northern Texas will be about $100,000.

Wrecks Many Buildings.

Monroe, La.—A small cyclone at Boscoe, 16 miles south of Monroe, wrecked the public school building, blew down a gums and wrecked heavy damage in other ways. At Monroe the rain was torrential and the wind violent.

DRAWN TO SCENE OF CRIME.

Georgian Who Killed Man in 1899 Surrenders to Sheriff.

Dublin, Ga.—Drawn by some irresistible impulse to return to the scene where he killed a man when he was 15 years of age, Manly B. Tripp, after roaming a good portion of the world for ten years, Thursday surrendered to the sheriff of Laurens county. For some days he has been here and was an interested spectator in the courthouse during a trial. He was not recognized until he voluntarily surrendered. He shot James Hood down on the street in 1899. He escaped and efforts to capture him failed.

Accuse Discharged Official.

St. Louis.—Clarence N. Jones, president of the Commonwealth Feed Company and a brother of Police Commissioner George P. Jones, was shot and killed in a quarrel in his mill at Second and De Soto streets here Wednesday. Herman A. Kretschmar, a discharged official of the company, was arrested and charged with the shooting. He asserts that he shot in self-defense. Jones died in the city hospital a few minutes after the shooting.

"Frats" Suspended from School.

Council Bluffs, Ia.—Seventeen boys of the Omega Eta Tau fraternity and 14 girls of the Theta Sigma Phi society were suspended from the high school Thursday for refusing to sign affidavits resigning membership in the secret societies.

Castro Declared Cured.

OKLAHOMA GOVERNOR INDICTED

CHARLES N. HASKELL AND SIX OTHERS ACCUSED OF FRAUD.

Defendants Charged with Conspiracy Against Government in Muskogee Town Lot Cases.

Muskogee, Okla.—As a result of the investigation by the grand jury of the alleged frauds in connection with the scheduling of town lots in this city seven indictments were returned Wednesday night. The charge against the defendants is conspiracy to defraud the government. Those indicted are:

Gov. Charles N. Haskell, F. B. Severs, A. Z. English, C. W. Turner, W. T. Hutchings, Jesse W. Hill and Walter R. Eaton.

Attorney Thomas H. Owen of Muskogee, representing Gov. Haskell, made arrangements for the governor Friday morning to enter his appearance and give bond in the sum of $5,000 for appearance for trial.

The writs issued are returnable forthwith.

Gov. Haskell is at Guthrie, the state capital. There is but one indictment against him charging him with conspiring with Walter R. Eaton and Clarence W. Turner to defraud the government. There are two indictments against Turner and one each against the others.

Turner was first to give bond in the sum of $10,000. Hutchings and Eaton gave bond in the sum of $5,000 each. All probably will be arraigned before Judge Campbell Friday morning. English is in Los Angeles, Cal.

In a statement issued at Guthrie, Gov. Haskell said:

"I have just heard of the indictment for conspiracy coupled with seven or eight of the oldest and highest-characterd citizens of Muskogee, men who developed and built up that country by their unselfish effort. From now on, the proceedings will be open to both sides.

"I am satisfied the interior department has been misled by false statements. I am confident there has not been a dishonest act done by any of the indicted parties and that good citizens in general, regardless of politics, feel the same way."

LEWIS RE-ELECTED BY MINERS.

Ohio Man Chosen for President by Majority of 16,000.

Indianapolis, Ind.—Thomas L. Lewis of Bridgeport, O., Wednesday was re-elected president of the United Mine Workers of the United States and Canada by a majority of more than 16,000 votes over his opponent, John H. Walker, district president of Illinois.

The report of the tellers of the ballots cast in the election of last December that as none of the candidates for vice-president or secretary-treasurer had received a majority of the votes cast, it would be necessary for the delegates assembled in the convention to decide the contest. Ballots then were distributed.

Attack Forest Service.

Washington.—The forest service got its usual annual drubbing Thursday, the criticisms against it coming principally from Mr. Smith (Cal.), Mr. Cook (Col.) and Mr. Mondell (Wyo.), all of whom charged extravagance in administration and the extortion of money from miners, farmers and even the owners of bee hives. Mr. Cook attributed to Mr. Pinchot, the chief forester, the ulterior motive of scheming for Secretary Wilson's seat in the cabinet.

Dayton Has Another Murder.

Dayton, O.—Late Friday afternoon the body of a young woman was dragged out of a cistern in the rear of a vacant house. Her brother, whom she was visiting, has identified her as Lizzie Fulhart, 18 years old, of Vandalia, O.

New Orleans Has Big Fire.

New Orleans.—Sparks from a donkey engine set fire to the wharf at the $3,000,000 Chalmette plant of the American sugar refinery Friday. The loss is $200,000.

STOPS THE JAP LEGISLATION.

Speaker's Appeal and Governor's Message Postpone California's Action.

Sacramento, Cal.—Speaker Phillip A. Stanton took the floor Friday and secured, by a strong personal appeal, unanimous consent of the assembly to postpone further action on the Japanese school segregation bill until next Wednesday.

He declared he had information, which he could not reveal, that proved the assembly was treading upon dangerous ground in passing the anti-Japanese bill.

At the conclusion of the speaker's address, Grove L. Johnson, author of the measure, asked that the matter of reconsideration of Thursday's vote be put over until Wednesday, and his motion carried without dissent.

Gov. Gillett sent a special message to the house raising the point of the bill's constitutionality, and this was the subject of a long debate, during which it was suggested by leaders on both sides that the measure be referred to the committee on judiciary and submitted to the attorney general for an opinion as to its legality.

Senator A. C. Minetti introduced the Japanese school bill in the senate.

DEFENDS USE OF SLEUTHS.

President Says Secret Service Is Necessary to Punish Criminals.

Washington.—Declaring that "if the government is to act with full efficiency against criminals, it must have some force of secret service agents who can act against criminals anywhere," President Roosevelt in a statement made public from the White House emphatically reiterated his opposition to restricting the field of usefulness of the secret service.

"The position of the administration is," said the president, "that it is against sound public policy to discriminate in favor of criminals by discriminating against the use of the secret service to detect and punish them."

The statement was called forth by "misleading statements appearing in some of the afternoon papers" to the effect that the work of the secret service has not been hampered and that the investigation of cases outside the detection of counterfeiters and the protection of the president has not been circumscribed by restrictive legislation at the last session of congress.

Wants Premium for Mothers.

Des Moines, Ia.—One dollar to the mother of every baby born in Iowa. Representative Fullam Friday introduced such a bill as a substitute to the tax on babies measure. It provides that the mother of a new born baby shall be paid one dollar by the county treasurer upon receipt of a certificate signed by the mother and the attending physician.

Relief Fund Is Now $3,641,000.

Washington.—Funds raised by the relief organizations for the earthquake victims in Italy have reached a total of $3,641,000, this sum representing the contributions which poured in from all quarters through the three leading organizations—the American National Red Cross, the Italian government committee and the Italian Red Cross.

Carrie Nation Is Fined.

London.—Carrie Nation became acquainted with the London police courts Thursday afternoon, when she was fined $7.50 for thrusting her umbrella through a window of a car in the underground railway upon which a cigarette advertisement was pasted.

Candy Maker Has Leprosy.

Los Angeles.—Samuel Bernick, a Russian candy vender who for a year or more has been stationed near the school, dispensing candy to the children and passers-by on the street, has been found to be a leper.

Attempt to Sell Girl Charged.

Pittsburg, Pa.—Raffalo de Biasi, a grocer of this city, was arrested Friday on complaint of Antonia Gentile, aged 17, who alleges that de Biasi, who is married, tried to sell a girl to him for $200.

READY TO DO HIS DUTY.

Prospective Juryman Was Even Anxious to Be Called.

Walter C. Goodson, an attorney of Macon, Mo., attended circuit court at Oskaloosa, Ia., one day recently, and noticed some interesting features which differed from the Missouri practice. "On the day of opening of court the judge lines up the petit jury and asks if there are any members who want to be excused," said Mr. Goodson. "The day I was there every man with one accord began to excuse himself. One said he had just purchased a farm and that he had to start his hands fixing it up. Another said he was a candy salesman and that his house would fire him if he didn't keep on the road. A great big woodsman said he was unable to read and write well and that he wasn't certain he knew enough to be a juror.

"Fully half of the men summoned had one reason or another why it would mean disaster to him to serve at that term of court—all but a little fellow at the tail end of the line. This man was a hunter and he had lived in a cabin on the creek all his life.

"'Have you no excuse to offer?' said the surprised judge.

"'No, sir.'

"'Haven't you got a sick mother-in-law needing your attention?'

"'No, sir; I ain't married.'

"'What about your crop?'

"'Don't raise anything.'

"'No fence to fix up?'

"'Haven't got a fence on the place.'

"'You think you can spare the time to serve on a jury two weeks?'

"'Sure.'

"The judge sat a while and meditated. Reaching over he whispered to the clerk, who shook his head in perplexity. Then the judge's curiosity got the better of him.

"'You're the only man who's got the time to serve your country as a juryman,' he said. 'Would you mind telling me how it happens?'

"'Sure not,' said the little man promptly. 'I heard you was going to try Jake Billings this term. He shot a dog o' mine once!'"—New York Sun.

When a Jag Is Not a Joke.

So absurdly lacking in a certain phase of humor is the Parisian that he sees nothing laughable or joyous in rolling about gutters or hiccoughing midnight songs or embroiling himself with his fellows while under the influence of strong drink.

That engaging product of social America who comes into the club, hollow cheeked and livid, remarking: "Gee, but I was pie-eyed last night," has few counterparts there. To have been helplessly or even conspicuously drunk in a public place is a thing which a Frenchman would be prone to hide rather than exploit. A strange and immoral race! Nothing has struck me more forcibly than this general sobriety—a dull, gray word, by the way, wherehy to describe a characteristic of the blithest people living.—Collier's.

Water Power Development.

The development of the water power of small streams is just beginning, but the movement is general all through this and foreign countries. Nearly 75 per cent. of the 5,737,372 farms in the United States boast of a small creek or two rioting boisterously through the bushy glens and rocky ravines or singing and playing through the daisy-spangled meadows. Nearly every one of these streams is available for horsepower.—American Review of Reviews.

Fishes of the Zambesi.

Two important collections of fishes recently received at the London Natural History museum will permit for the first time a complete study of the ichthyology of the Zambesi region of Africa. Among the 168 specimens of the two collections, 19 new species are represented, and they give a total of 140 species of the Zambesi. Among the most interesting species of the region are fresh water representatives of two essentially marine genera, the pipe-fish and the shark.

HE ALMOST REMEMBERED IT.

Boy at Least Had Combination Somewhere Near Right.

Donald had returned from a visit to the country, and was full of reminiscences of persons and things that had interested him. "I met a boy, mamma," he said, "that had the queerest name I ever heard. He said his folks found it in the Old Testament. It was—it was—let me see—yes, it was Father William, or William Father; I've forgotten just now which. But it was one or the other."

"But, Donald," said his mother, "there is no such name as Father William or William Father in the Old Testament."

"Are you sure, mamma?"

"I certainly am, dear. I have read it through several times. William is a comparatively modern name. It isn't anywhere in the Bible."

"Well, but—oh, I remember now!" exclaimed Donald. "It was Bildad!"—Youth's Companion.

CHILD HAD SIXTY EOILS,

And Suffered Annually with a Red Scald-Like Humor on Her Head.

Troubles Cured by Cuticura.

"When my little Vivian was about six months old her head broke out in boils. She had about sixty in all and I used Cuticura Soap and Cuticura Ointment which cured her entirely. Some time later a humor broke out behind her ears and spread up on to her head until it was nearly half covered. The humor looked like a scald, very red with a sticky, clear fluid coming from it. This occurred every spring. I always used Cuticura Soap and Ointment which never failed to heal it up. The last time it broke out it became so bad that I was discouraged. But I continued the use of Cuticura Soap, Ointment and Resolvent until she was well and has never been troubled in the last two years. Mrs. M. A. Why It's a Homely Beast.

Augustus Thomas, the playwright told in a recent speech of a hunting trip they had taken in the south. They were after cooons and possums, but the only trail the dogs struck was one which made them put their tails between their legs and turn for home.

"Just what does a polecat look like?" Mr. Thomas asked one of his negro guides.

"A polecat, boss? Why, a polecat's somefin' like a kitten, only prettier. Yes, a polecat's a heap prettier'n a kitten, ain't it, Sam?" he said turning to another negro for corroboration.

Sam did not seem so sure. He hesitated a moment.

Deafness Cannot Be Cured

by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When the tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, Deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by Catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by catarrh) that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars, free.

ROOSEVELT QUOTED IN CRITICISM OF PERKINS

President's Message to Governor Gillett Said To Score California Member of Senate.

New York, Feb. 8.—A special dispatch received Sunday night from San Francisco states that President Roosevelt telegraphed the following to Gov. J. N. Gillett, San Francisco, Cal.:

"I saw Flint as soon as your message came. He has been helping me in every possible way, and after consulting with him I wired Speaker Stanton a message which he can make public if he thinks advisable. Please see him. I am astonished at Perkins' conduct. He has for the past seven years done whatever he could to hamper us in the upbuilding of the navy and has acted against the real advocates of the navy. Yet now he advises a policy of wanton insult. I have nothing to advise at the present moment, but I can not speak too highly in praise of the course you have followed. I suppose my telegram to the speaker is the best way I can render assistance. Please wire if there is anything I can do.—Theodore Roosevelt."

Perkins Explains Attitude.

Washington, Feb. 8.—Senator Perkins, of California, commented Sunday night upon the attacks said to have been made upon him in a telegram sent by President Roosevelt to Gov. Gillett, of California, in which the president says: "I am astonished at Perkins' conduct. He has for the past seven years done whatever he could to hamper us in the upbuilding of the navy and has acted against the real advocates of the navy. Yet, now he advises a policy of wanton insult."

Senator Perkins denied he was an enemy seeking to thwart the progress of the navy and declared he would rely upon his record in the senate in support of this contention. He intimated that the only basis for the president's criticism of his action and what he termed the only exception in its record in support of the navy and its needs, was his vote against the four battleships' program urged by the president. Relative to the position he has taken on the Japanese question, Senator Perkins said that in the face of any treaty with a foreign power in his opinion the right of a state to have its own policing power was beyond question.

Agitation To Continue.

Sacramento, Cal., Feb. 8.—Anti-Japanese legislation will be to the fore this week in both branches of the legislature.

Two resolutions drawn by Grove L. Johnson, of Sacramento, and aimed at the island emperor's subjects will be the subject of discussion in the assembly on Wednesday, one already passed segregating the Japaneso in the public schools of the state, and the other, which was refused passage, empowering municipalities to segregate in residential districts all undesirable aliens whose presence might, in the opinion of boards of supervisors, be inimical to the public health and morals of the various communities affected.

It is the school bill that most deeply concerns President Roosevelt, and between this time and Wednesday it is expected that the national authorities will throw additional light upon the subject.

This is supposed to be of an extremely important nature showing the true state of diplomatic negotiations pending between Japan and the United States, and revealing to the legislature the reason for Mr. Roosevelt's numerous telegrams to the governor urging postponement of further action on anti-Japanese legislation. The situation is considered grave.

TWO KILLED

And Three Seriously Wounded By Frenzied Canadian Farmer.

Shelbourne, Ont., Feb. 8.—Two persons dead and three so seriously injured that they may not recover, is the result of murderous attacks made by George Stewart, a young farmer of Maple Valley. Stewart, who is mentally unbalanced, was staying with his brother at Reddickville, and started out in the early morning with a rifle. His brother attempted to restrain him and was attacked and beaten, but not seriously injured. Stewart then went to the nearby home of John Spanhouse and fired upon Mrs. Spanhouse twice, wounding her in the eye and arm. Her husband rushed to her assistance and was shot dead. A son, James, who was sleeping upstairs, ran down at the sound of the shots and Stewart, whose rifle was empty, beat his brains out with the butt of the weapon.

Stewart then started for his own home, but stopped on the way at the home of Edwin Pends, who at the time was absent. Here he attacked the hired man, George Beaumont, and the housekeeper, Mrs. Gowans, with the empty weapon, beating them both unconscious and fracturing the man's skull. He was arrested.

Four score and seven years ago our fathers brought forth, upon this continent, a new nation, conceived in liberty, and dedicated to the proposition that all men are created equal.

Now we are engaged in a great civil war, testing whether that nation, or any nation so conceived and so dedicated, can long endure. We are met on a great battle field of that war. We have come to dedicate a portion of it, as a final resting place for those who here gave their lives that that nation might live. It is altogether fitting and proper that we should do this.

But, in a larger sense, we can not dedicate—we can not consecrate—we can not hallow this ground. The brave men, living and dead, who struggled here, have hallowed it, far above our poor power to add or detract. The world will little note, nor long remember what we say here; while it can never forget what they did here.

It is rather for us, the living, we here be dedicated to the great task remaining before us—that from these honored dead we take increased devotion to that cause for which they here gave the last full measure of devotion—that we here highly resolve that these dead shall not have died in vain; that this nation, shall have a new birth of freedom, and that government of the people, by the people, for the people, shall not perish from the earth.

The Gettysburg Address, November 19, 1863. Facsimile of the Original First Version.

Centenary of Lincoln's Birth Is Appropriately Remembered by Country

Worthily have the American people joined in an appropriate celebration of the Lincoln centenary, and extended it to the remotest corners of the land. The 12th of this month is the one hundredth anniversary of the birth of Abraham Lincoln. That date is observed with solemn and yet grateful ceremony by the whole American people, who owe more to Lincoln than to any other citizen of the republic, save only Washington.

Lincoln is, after Washington, the greatest figure in our national history. No other man performed services so great as his, or was so high a character. His conduct during the trying days of the civil war, when the union that had been founded with high hopes for human liberty seemed destined to be destroyed, was such as to appear inspired by a power greater than human, and many an American has thanked God in his nightly prayers that so wise, gentle, forbearing a leader had been raised up by divine direction to guide the country to safety. His death was a great calamity, not less to the south than to the north; for, if Lincoln had been spared, his qualities of heart and mind would have made the task of reconstruction much easier than it proved and would have healed the wounds of war much sooner.

The south will join with the north in observing Lincoln's one hundredth birthday, for now, in these latter days his memory is as deeply beloved south of Mason and Dixon's line as north of it. The celebration is worthy to be remembered as an expression of the gratitude and affection of a great people.

When we once resolve to lay aside desire to make of Lincoln's life and words an arsenal from which to draw weapons with which to fight for special causes, and consider with quiet thought Abraham Lincoln as all Americans know he was, we find the materials ample.

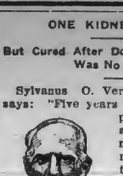
We see Abraham Lincoln as a homely, kindly, patient man, who loved his country as men love their mothers. We see him seeking the welfare of all that mother's sons because he was one of them. We see him working such as no American before, save humbly and patiently under hurdens Washington, and none since, has been called upon to bear.

We see him always charitable, realizing that in this human world men are moved by all sorts of motives, and appealing to all motives that in honesty and honor he could, asking only that the results of the appeals be acts helping to save and restore to peace the nation mother.

And so Abraham Lincoln wrought with the tools at hand, never complaining of their human imperfections, using to his great end not only the noblest aspirations of the best but every force of human desire, and thus delivering a race from bondage and saving a nation because he ever wrought with malice toward none and with charity for all."

Two Good Tales of Lincoln.

On one occasion President Lincoln, on entering the telegraph office of the war department, writes Mr. Bates in "Lincoln in the Telegraph Office," was heard to remark to Secretary Seward: "By jings, governor, we are here at last!" Turning to him in a reproving manner, Mr. Seward said: "Mr. President, where did you learn that inelegant expression?" Without replying to the secretary Lincoln addressed the telegraph operators, saying:



"Young gentlemen, excuse me for swearing before you. 'By jings' is swearing, for my good old mother taught me that anything that had a 'by' before it was swearing."

One day Secretary Seward, who was not renowned as a joker, said that he had been told that a short time before on a street crossing, Lincoln had been seen to turn out in the mud to allow a colored woman to pass.

"Yes," said Lincoln, "it has been the rule of my life that if people would no turn out for me I would turn out for them. Then you avoid collisions."

ONE KIDNEY GONE

But Cured After Doctors Said There Was No Hope.

Sylvanus O. Verrill, Milford, Me., says: "Five years ago a bad injury paralyzed me and affected my kidneys. My back hurt me terribly, and the urine was badly disordered. Doctors said my right kidney was practically dead. They said I could never walk again. I read of Doan's Kidney Pills and began using them. One box made me stronger and freer from pain. I kept on using them and in three months was able to get out on crutches, and the kidneys were acting better. I improved rapidly, discarded the crutches and the wonder of my friends was soon completely cured."

Not Afraid of a Ghost.

In a village in England, a month or so ago, a man came running into an inn at nine o'clock at night and cried out that there was a ghost in his back yard. There were 14 men in the inn, and not one of them dared to go home with the man and investigate. There was a person who dared, however, and that was the landlord's daughter, a girl of 14. Some of the men followed her at a distance, and she went into the yard and up to the ghost flapping its arms about, and discovered—what? That it was no more nor less than a man's white shirt flapping on the clothes line in a strong breeze. That's about the way all ghosts turn out.

Looking Forward.

Mr. Wiggins, being in a frivolous mood, was giving a burlesque imitation of palmistry—pretending to read his wife's fortune in her palm. Six-year-old Ruth was listening with intense seriousness, but neither of them was noticing her.

"And, finally," he concluded, after the usual recitals about a dark man, a light man, a journey, and a large fortune, "you will live to a great age."

"Thank God!" broke in Ruth, clapping her hands ecstatically. "Then my children will have a grandmother!"

Come Get Your Medicine.

If that little bit of three-cornered, half-jointed, pin-headed squirt with a big automobile and a size three head on his miserable, slanting shoulders, who turned the corner of Ferry and Main streets on two wheels the other afternoon, and nearly sent three pedestrians into Kingdom Come, will call at this office we'll tear his scrawny soul to pieces and lick him to a "frazzle" after the most approved Roosevelt methods. He knows who we mean.—Buffalo News.

Original Wedding Cake.

It is said to be a curious fact that the wedding cake, that elaborate, indigestible compound so indispensable at the modern marriage ceremony, is the direct descendant of a cake made of water, flour and salt, of which, at the Roman high-class weddings, the married couple and the witnesses partook at the time of the signing of the contract.—Housekeeping.

NO MEDICINE

But a Change of Food Gave Relief.

Many persons are learning that drugs are not the thing to rebuild worn out nerves, but proper food is required.

There is a certain element in the cereals, wheat, harley, etc., which is grown there by nature for food to brain and nerve tissue. This is the phosphate of potash, of which Grape-Nuts food contains a large proportion.

In making this food all the food elements in the two cereals, wheat and barley, are retained. That is why so many heretofore nervous and run down people find in Grape-Nuts a true nerve and brain food.

"I can say that Grape-Nuts food has done much for me as a nerve renewer," writes a Wis. bride.

"A few years ago, before my marriage, I was a bookkeeper in a large firm. I became so nervous toward the end of each week that it seemed I must give up my position, which I could not afford to do.

"Mother purchased some Grape-Nuts and we found it not only delicious but I noticed from day to day that I was improving until I finally realized I was not nervous any more.

"I have recommended it to friends as a brain and nerve food, never having found its equal. I owe much to Grape-Nuts as it saved me from a nervous collapse, and enabled me to retain my position."

[Carrollton News.]

In discussing this subject in the last issue of the News-Herald published by a prospective candidate for the nomination for Commonwealth Attorney, it is said "A convention is the cheapest, it gives every man a fair chance to stand out in the open and let every man know who he is for." A convention in this Judicial district virtually disfranchises the counties of Grant, Gallatin and Carroll. We are for any plan that gives every citizen a right to cast his vote for the candidate of his choice and after that the convenience and right of each candidate should be considered.

The counties of Owen and Boone have twenty-six delegate votes while the first named counties only have twenty-three. The counties of Boone and Owen can control in a convention and refuse to give the other three counties any consideration at all.

We understand that those who advocate a convention are doing it for the purpose of nominating only an Owen county man and a Boone county man to these offices. Now we are always for a square deal and with a primary in this district all counties will be treated alike and their candidates will have an equal show. This is a day of primary and not of disfranchisement and the voters of this district are in favor of making all nominations by primaries.

The News-Herald says. "A primary entails a deal of expense." It will cost less than $1,000 to hold a primary in this district, which divided among the candidates will not bear heavily upon any—the cost of the primary is no excuse for having a convention.

There was many times $1,000 spent by the candidates for Commonwealth Attorney in the precinct conventions, when the last Commonwealth Attorney was nominated.

We have already expressed ourselves as to the time of the nomination in the former issue of this paper. In order to give every county and her candidates a square deal give us a primary and let us have it now before the busy season begins.

Whenever a committee attempts to set up a nomination for any man, or set of men, by disfranchising any considerable number of Democrats the voters will not stand for, and such proceedings are injurious to the party and is calculated to drive our votes to the Republicans, who have gained too many from our ranks on account of bad politics.

The RECORDER has no information from those in the county who make it their business to look after local political affairs for the Democratic party, as to what they deem the proper manner of nominating candidates for Circuit Judge and Commonwealth's Attorney in this judicial district, but is sanguine that the rank and file of the party is overwhelmingly in favor of primary elections, where the vote of the humblest Democrat that occupies a log cabin on a hill side or in a dismal hollow, will count just as much as that of the high toned gentleman who wears kid gloves and is clad in broad cloth. This being a government by the people, they have come to believe they should have a voice in the selection of those who administer it. In a district where a party's nomination is equivalent to an election, the primary election is their only hope for a "say" in the choice of the officials. The time has come that those who want offices, county, district or State must appeal to the voters instead of committees, which, in the last few years have perverted their duties from that of looking after party welfare to that of setting up conventions in the interest of some particular friend or friends.

The RECORDER is not prepared to controvert the statement made by the News that Boone and Owen counties are seeking to combine to name both of the nominees.

ONLY A FEW VOTES

Separate the Contestants in The Popularity Contest this Week.

In this contest Miss Jennie Aylor still holds the lead but by a very small majority, Miss Sadie Crisler, who was in third place, last week, having shown her hustling qualities and polled 1800 votes, putting her within 150 votes of Miss Aylor. Miss Reiman goes to third position this week, but she and her friends have a good territory in which to work and she may be at the top of the column next week, although she has two good workers leading her while those below her may come with a surprising burst of speed next week. Miss Carpenter just doubled her vote this week, and if she does that every week during the contest, she will be hard to beat. Miss Hance, Miss Madden and Mrs. Rouse each received the same number of votes this week, and are not out of the race which is anybody's yet.

Many persons who have renewed their subscriptions since the first of last January and quite a number of new subscribers have not voted, but a larger per cent of the vote is being polled this month than during January, which shows that the interest in the contest is increasing. It is not too late for a teacher to enter the contest and come out winner if she can develop better vote getting qualities than her opponents. The more the merrier and the easier it will be to land a winner. As the contestants are now located each has a considerable territory from which to draw votes, and they are evidently going after all that is in it.

May a merciful God deal kindly with all who were so kind.

FROM HER CHILDREN.

The inquiry into the mental condition of Mrs. Martha Griffith, of Walton, was concluded about 12 o'clock last Saturday night, the jury returning a verdict finding her of sound mind. The proceedings were begun on Thursday of the week preceding and late on Saturday afternoon of that week the hearing was adjourned over until the next Tuesday, on account of the Monday intervening being county court day. It was a tedious case, hotly contested and in which a very large number of witnesses testified. The arguments of counsel began shortly afternoon last Friday and were not concluded until about 4 p. m. Saturday. The speeches on behalf of Mrs. Griffith were made by O. M. Rogers and S. W. Tolin, and on behalf of the Commonwealth by J. G. Tomlin, John L. Vest and D. E. Castleman. This will go down in the history of Boone county as her most noted trial under a writ delunatico inquiendo. The attendance throughout the investigation was large, being composed of both sexes, and all ages from the little tot to old, gray headed men and women.

It is said that the jury stood six to six when the jurors first expressed themselves after going to their room.

EFFECTIVE RECIPE.

Home-Made Kidney, Bladder and Rheumatism Medicine for Readers.

Here is a simple home-made mixture as given by an eminent authority on Kidney diseases, who makes the statement that it will relieve almost any case of Kidney trouble if taken before the stage of Bright's disease. He states that such symptoms as lame back, pain in the side, frequent desire to urinate, especially at night; painful and discolored urination, are readily overcome. Here is the recipe. Try it:

These ingredients are all harmless and easily mixed at home by shaking well in a bottle. This mixture has a peculiar healing and soothing effect upon the entire Kidney and Urinary structure, and often overcomes the worst forms of Rheumatism in just a little while. This mixture is said to remove all blood disorders and cure Rheumatism by forcing the Kidneys to filter and strain from the blood and system all uric acid and foul, decomposed waste matter, which cause these afflictions. Try it if you aren't

INDIGESTION ENDS.

Misery from your Disordered Stomach goes in Five Minutes.

You can eat anything your stomach craves without fear of a case of Indigestion or Dyspepsia, or that your food will ferment or sour on your stomach if you will occasionally take a little Diapepsin after eating.

Your meals will taste good, and anything you eat will be digested; nothing can ferment or turn into acid or poison or stomach gas, which causes Belching, Dizziness, a feeling of fullness after eating, Nausea. Indigestion (like a lump of lead in stomach), Biliousness, Heartburn, Water brash, Pain in stomach and intestines or other symptoms.

Headaches from the Stomach are absolutely unknown where this effective remedy is used. Diapepsin really does all the work of a healthy stomach. It digests your meals when your stomach can't. Each triangule will digest all the food you can eat and leave nothing to ferment or sour.

Get a large 50-cent case of Pape's Diapepsin from your druggist and start taking today and by tomorrow you will actually brag about your healthy, strong Stomach, for you then can eat anything and everything you want without the slightest discomfort or misery, and every particle of impurity and Gas that is in your stomach and intestines is going to be carried away without the use of laxatives or any other assistance.

[Carrollton News.]

The case of Judge W. P. Yancey, of the Owen county court, which brought into court over one hundred witnesses, mostly the best people in Owen, Gallatin, Grant and Boone counties, was on trial from Tuesday until late Saturday afternoon, and was stubbornly fought by the attorneys on both sides.

The case was for criminal libel, Hon. F. C. Greene, Commonwealth's Attorney, being the prosecuting witness, Judge Yancey having written letters to parties in this county calculated to defame his character.

The argument was opened by Judge Wm. Carroll for the defense, followed by J. A. Donaldson for the Commonwealth. Geo. B. Winslow made the second speech for the defense and John S. Gaunt had the closing speech.

The jury was out but a short time when they filed into court and delivered their verdict to Judge Wilson, which found Judge Yancey guilty and fixed his punishment at five hundred dollars and costs.

The jury, we understand, stood or the above verdict upon the first ballot, with the exception of two, one of whom insisted upon $2,000 and the other for $5,000, but they all gut together on the next ballot.

Several of the jurors are reported as saying that they felt sorry for Judge Yancey, believing that he was prompted in his action by another party, and if it had been within their province, or had the other party been on trial, the fine would not have been less than $5,000.

The verdict is a vindication of Mr. Greene and restores him to his former standing, and then some.

The defense was granted time until March 10th next to prepare a bill of evidence and exception for an appeal.

The NEWS had no feeling in the matter, as we are friendly to all parties, and we only give the facts as brought out.

Rumor is current that a civil suit for libel will be instituted by Mr. Greene.

ZECHARIAH'S CALL

(Copyright, 1909, by the Author, W. S. Nilson.)

The Prophet Zechariah.—He was the son of Berechiah, and grandson of Iddo, and was probably of the tribe of Levi. He was born in Babylon, and like Haggai, came to Jerusalem with Zerubbabel. He seems to have entered upon his mission when quite young (Zech. 2:4). The foundation of the temple had indeed been laid, but that was all (Ezra 5:16). Discouraged by the opposition and the long delay of 14 years in the building the Jewish colony were slow to take up the work again even when the letter came from Darius sanctioning the work, and promising his protection. At such a time no more fitting instrument could be found to rouse the people, whose hearts had grown cold, than one who united to the authority of the prophet the zeal and the traditions of the sacerdotal family. Accordingly, to Zechariah's influence we find the rebuilding a great measure ascribed (Ezra 6:14). Later traditions assume, what is indeed very probable, that Zechariah took personally an active part in providing for the liturgical service of the temple. He and Haggai are both said to have composed psalms with this view. If the later Jewish accounts may be trusted, Zechariah, as well as Haggai, was a member of the great synagogue. Zechariah is the only one of the prophets who speaks of Satan.

Scripture Authority — Zechariah, chapter 1.

SERMONETTE.

No permanent work of reform can be accomplished until there is a change of heart.

Haggai, the prophet, had succeeded in arousing governor, priest and people to a pitch of enthusiasm where the work of rebuilding the temple was taken up. And after the first burst of enthusiasm interest began to lag.

It needs more than outward enthusiasm to keep any reform movement going. There must be depth of conviction, and consecration of purpose to give the long, hard, steady pull that will lead on to successful completion of the work.

And the work which Haggai had so splendidly begun, the young man Zechariah was raised up to complete. His was a deeper work, a work which was to get below the surface and grip the heart for the long pull and the hard pull, and the pull all together.

The success of any movement does not depend so much upon the crowd who are ready to take up the shout of the multitudes during the popular excitement, but, rather, upon the few into whose hearts there has come the deep conviction of the righteousness of the cause in which they have enlisted, and who are ready in the face of the most discouraging circumstances and opposition to press forward.

To bring such people to the support of the governor in his great temple building enterprise was the task to which Zechariah was called, and his first message was one of warning and appeal.

The sad history of the past was recalled that the people who would listen might understand how sin had taken the people away from God and that the sin had been followed by punishment.

But if now the people would turn to the Lord he would turn to them. They must get right with God before the work of the temple building could prosper.

So it is with any work to which God calls his people today. Those engaged in the work must get right with God before the work of the temple building could prosper.

So it is with any work to which God calls his people today. Those engaged in the work must get right with God before they can do consistent and persistent and efficient work.

To the builders of the kingdom of his righteousness to-day, God is saying as he spoke to the temple builders: "Turn ye unto me, and I will turn unto you."

THE STORY.

IT WAS two full months now since the stirring message of the prophet Haggai had aroused governor and people to again take up the work of rebuilding the temple. Much had been done in that time, for the people in the first flush of their enthusiasm took hold of the task with a will. But the work completed seemed nothing in comparison to what still remained to be done, and discouragement and doubt began to dampen the ardor of the people. Fewer came to labor on the task, and those who did come labored half-heartedly.

That very day Zerubbabel the governor had sent out appeal for more workers and had sought to arouse those who were at work to more energetic efforts. But apparently to no avail.

Zechariah had been among those who had responded to the first call of the governor for workers, and every day since then he had been at his self-imposed post of duty. But as has been said, the work had begun to lag and the appeal of the governor that day had met with no response, and as Zechariah wended his way home that night his heart was heavy within him.

Belonging as he did to the tribe of Levi, and being the son of devout parents who had trained him reverently with the thought of his ultimate place among the priesthood, he had early wholly given himself to God and was an eager student of all the wonderful history of his nation and God's dealings with them.

He recalled that night during his walk home how eager and joyful he had been when the caravan of returning Jews had set out from Babylon. All through that long journey he had pictured himself the future glory of the beloved Jerusalem. How the temple would be rebuilt and the city take on much of the old life and activity which had marked it in the days of its former glory.

And now he contrasted the pictures which his enthusiastic young hope had drawn with the realities of the present, after 15 years of struggle and waiting.

"What has been God's purpose in bringing his people back to Zion if the temple is not to be rebuilt?" he asked himself, as he reached his modest little room and sat down on the low bench and watched with a far-away look the sun sink out of sight in the west.

His frugal meal was forgotten, and he was unconscious of the gathering darkness. His whole thought centered around the history of the return of the Jews to Jerusalem and the evident failure of the highest hopes of the movement. And he went on to catechise himself as to why such things could be.

"God has spoken of great blessing to his people at Jerusalem," mused Zachariah. "Was it not his promise that after 70 years he would return the captivity and establish his people in Zion? Had not Daniel searched out these promises given by the prophet Jeremiah and had not they found fulfilment in the return 15 years before? Had not the return been with gladness, and had not the manifest blessing of God rested upon the movement?"

With what joy, he thought, had they begun the rebuilding of the temple in order that God might have a dwelling place in their midst. And the work had progressed to the point where the ruins had been cleared and the foundation walls again built ready to begin the superstructure. Then had come the opposition of the Samaritans and the decree of Artaxerxes ordering that the work be stopped. But now the king of Babylon was dead and Darius had come to the throne, and with the change had come the new inspiration and hope that the work on the temple would be resumed.

Haggai had come with his stirring message, and had reassured the people with the promise that God was with them. But now after two months the work was lagging and gave indications of ceasing again altogether.

"What is the matter?" exclaimed Zechariah. "What can be done to rouse the people and hold them to their tasks? It needs more than the enthusiasm which first aroused the people," he muttered to himself as he leaned out of the open casement and watched the stars flashing out one by one as the night grew darker.

"What is indifference to God's work but the forgetting of God and God's law?" he demanded of himself, at last. "Does not sin lie at the door, then? Ah," he exclaimed, excitedly, "that is where the trouble lies. We need God."

As though by way of response, a voice came floating down through the night and instinctively Zechariah knew it was God speaking. With uplifted but reverent gaze, Zechariah whispered:

"Speak, Lord, thy message."

Again came the voice, saying:

"The Lord hath been sore displeased with your fathers. Therefore, say unto them, Thus saith the Lord of hosts: Turn ye unto me, saith the Lord of hosts, and I will turn unto you, saith the Lord of hosts. Be ye not as your fathers, unto whom the former prophets have cried, saying, Thus saith the Lord of Hosts: Turn ye now from your evil ways, and from your evil doings; but they did not hear, nor hearken unto me, saith the Lord. But my words and my statutes, which I commanded my servants the prophets did they not take hold of your fathers? and they returned and said, Like as the Lord of hosts thought to do unto us, according to our ways, and according to our doings, so hath he dealt with us."

"The Lord hath told me to speak to his people," whispered Zechariah to himself after the voice had ceased. "Can it be?" he exclaimed in rapture, "that God is calling me as prophet and priest to serve his people?"

And then by way of response he added, earnestly:

"I will speak. All the Lord hath said will I tell the people. And, Oh, that they may indeed hear the voice of God and turn to him. It is only thus that the work of the rebuilding of the temple will prosper."

So it came to pass on the morrow that Zechariah's place upon the temple walls was vacant, but Jerusalem had a new prophet whose voice was sounding throughout the city the call to repentance and urging the need of turning to God.

Talks to Salespeople

By MISS DIANA HIRSCHLER, LL. B.

(Expert Trainer in Salesmanship)

Generating Selling Optimism

Mr. Salesman has the dyspepsia. Certainly a man has a right to have his own dyspepsia if he wants to—he pays the price for it, and a heavy one, at that.

Well-no, not exactly; a salesman belongs to the public. If he can get the dyspepsia and not make the public help him pay for it has has the argument on his side. The trouble is, in spite of dictionaries, dyspepsia belongs not to the digestion alone, but also to the temper. It colors the mental outlook blue.

When the mind has been thoroughly steeped in blueing it is not well to air it in public.

The mind must be present in selling if the sales-person really wishes to make a record. Of course, a record is sometimes forced upon a sales-person in spite of himself, but such luck does not become epidemic.

In brief, dyspepsia pinches the temper of the seller—and what is more disastrous to good selling than a nipped temper?

Occasionally the customer thinks he has a right to have the dyspepsia, too; and I don't know but that he has this right in so far as the store is concerned. He does not belong to the store, but the store belongs to him. When dyspepsia meets dyspepsia look out for that sales-record. Then does the thing that is crying to be sold hold its breath to see who comes out on top.

Did you, Mr. Salesman, ever realize how it concerns your duty to the public to chew your food so that chunks of it do not make your digestive apparatus go on a strike? Nature has given you wonderful machines to prepare the food so that it will feed the various parts of the body with good red blood. She asks you not to make it too hard for these machines by neglecting to use the mill in your mouth that is there for grinding the food.

The teeth are the hardest materials in the body and are meant to do good service before the food reaches those organs which you do not have to bother about directing: the stomach, the liver, the pancreas, the spleen, all take care of themselves if you only do not impede them.

The one thing that does impede them is to throw down a lot of food without tearing it up and mixing it into a pulp in the mouth. They make it mighty uncomfortable for you in consequence if you don't.

Again, do you realize that you are surrounded with air—that this air is a good thing for you to breathe both day and night? One would think it was poison from the way people cramp their chests to avoid it—they take such little stingy gasps of it.

Air is needed in the body, else we would not have been born with a magnificent pair of bellows—the lungs—with which to take it in. Do you imagine any part of us was made for fun? Both the inside of the body and the outside were meant to be well aired, and unless they are well aired beware of good-nature and continuous optimism, so necessary to selling goods week in and week out.

A big, generous breath, besides supplying air to purify, sets muscles in motion that give natural exercise to those digestive organs which cause us so much trouble. This exercise helps them in their own strenuous activity of digesting an underdone potato and an overdone beefsteak.

Do be generous with yourself in breathing. Air costs nothing but effort, and that only at first, for after a time you would no more do without splendid deep breathing than you would do without washing your face.

Out of doors and in street cars count seven, the magic number, while you are inhaling, and feel your trunk and chest expand as if it were a balloon. Then hold your breath to the count of three, and count seven while you breathe out. You know you are not breathing out the same air you have breathed in. That air has been eagerly absorbed by yourself to help in the making of rich, red blood. You are breathing out impurities such as, if retained, give you a headache that is often converted into a lost sale.

You excuse yourself to yourself by saying that you have a headache, when what you really have is poison because of your laziness in not inhaling fresh air and breathing out un-fresh air.

Breathe the same way behind the counter. Don't make excuse that the air is not fresh. It is better to keep our breathing machine active with half-pure air than to shut it off with only a miserly bit of exercise.

Remember also that the chest is the box in which the lungs are kept. If you squeeze it in through a bad standing position, rounding the shoulders, the air cannot get into the body.

When you inhale, lift your head up as if you were not ashamed of living. Hold it well up at the crown. Then it does not drag down on the lung-box. And, by the way, when you are through exhaling, keep it that way. Look the whole world in the face with a direct look. This pulls up the muscles of the chest.

Always hold the chest well up and forward, as if you were ready to move instantly. This lifts it so the air can get into the space beneath. Now you are ready to breathe.

If your breathing stopped suddenly you would lose your job, wouldn't you? Then it is equally true that if you breathe little you are less capable of holding your job. If you breathe much, you are capable of holding it; for the body is necessary in selling goods. You can't bring your mind into your department without it. And for the best selling, your body must be all there and not in part.

You are born in air, you live in air, you move about in it and would step down and out without it.

Then, all together, one, two, three, breathe.

But Soon.

"Come, don't be foolish," said the pretty young wife, "he's merely an old flame of mine."

"Indeed!" cried her aged but rich husband. "I'll warrant you dream of his tender advances yet."

"No," she replied, with a faraway look, "not yet."—The Catholic Standard and Times.

TRIES PATIENCE OF CURATOR.

Too Many People Are Interested in Mistake of Potter.

A curator up at the Metropolitan museum is threatened with insanity, the cause being a small misnamed exhibit in the gallery outside his office door.

"Twenty times a day," declared the harassed man, "people discover that that china statuette out in the Franklin collection is named Gen. Washington instead of Benjamin Franklin. Then they insist on it more and pronounce their discovery and wonder that no one ever noticed it before. Half my time is spent in explaining that we know it well; that it was simply a mistake of the potter who labeled it in France over a century ago, and that we cannot change it, nor wouldn't if we could.

"Of course I tell them this courteously and patiently, and you know what a strain that is when you are going over the same thing for the thousandth time! I'd latch the door only there are too many employes seeking me all day long; so here I must sit and listen to the names of George Washington and Benjamin Franklin repeated a million times, till I wish that neither of those glorious patriots had ever lived. And it's driving me insane, I tell you, it's driving me insane!"

Just then the door opened and a lady popped in with:

"There's a statue out here named Gen. Washington, but I'm sure—" And the weary curator, being a southerner, rose smilingly to his task.—New York Times.

The Tactful Suitor.

A youth in Trenton, whose devotion to the young woman of his choice has encountered many obstacles during his long courtship, recently sought her out with this apparently encouraging statement:

"I think it's all right now, Alice. I managed to get access to your father the other day, and while he wouldn't exactly give his consent I rather imagine I've made some headway. He borrowed $40 of me. Surely he can't stand me off much longer after that!"

The young woman sighed. "Yes, I've heard about it," she said, "and I think you've made an awful mess of it. Father mentioned the $40 and remarked that I'd better give you up—you were too easy."—Harper's Weekly.

Round Trip Cincinnati to Florida Free

I will pay your railroad fare to Hilliard, Florida, from Cincinnati, or any point south or east of Cincinnati, any day during February or March, if you buy just one of the 240-10-acre truck farms in the 3 MILE LIMIT, now offered at the bed-rock price of $21 an acre—$210 for ten acres in the North Florida Fruit and Truck Farm district, which will pay $3,000 to $5,000 a year, located within 1-2 to 3 miles of Hilliard, a live town on the Atlantic Coast Line Railroad—30 miles from Jacksonville, Florida.

Winter tourist rates in effect daily from Cincinnati. More than 300 Illinois, Indiana and Ohio men have taken advantage of our free round trip to Florida and bought over 500 farms, and these 240 FARMS WITHIN THE 3 MILE LIMIT will be grabbed up in 10 days. Read this advertisement carefully. Send reservation coupon to-day.

North Florida is the land of fruits and vegetables—North Florida produces the finest celery in the world—North Florida attracts every visitor by its sunny, balmy winter days and its ideal summer weather—North Florida has all the money making, vegetable and fruit growing possibilities of the warmer central and southern parts of Florida with the exception of pineapple and banana growing—North Florida has 365 growing days and nights a year for fruits and vegetables—North Florida is recognized as "America's greatest fruit and vegetable garden"—North Florida offers a better all the year climate and more healthful sea-breeze air and a more ideal place for home life the year around for men, women and children than any other place in America—North Florida holds rare opportunities for a man of limited means.

I will send you full details of this offer the moment I receive the coupon cut from the lower corner of this advertisement, and a plat of the truck farms showing the location of the 240 farms all of which are within ½ to 3 miles of Hilliard.

When these 240 farms within the 3 MILE LIMIT are sold there will not be another farm available as near Hilliard in the North Florida Fruit and Truck Farm district for less than $30 an acre as the price will immediately advance on every farm for that figure.

We will not resell your farm for less than $30 an acre and no farms will be reserved for anyone unless we receive the coupon with $5.00. The first coupons each accompanied by $5.00, received in this office will get farms within ½ mile of Hilliard, and as each coupon with $5.00 is received it will be treated in like manner.

Ten days from the time this advertisement is published in the newspapers of Ohio, Indiana and Kentucky there will not be one of these 240 farms remaining unsold. We know this because the demand for these farms in our North Florida Fruit and Truck Farm district is increasing daily and we have only 240 remaining farms unsold within the 3 MILE LIMIT.

I will send you a portfolio of pictures of the farms, the new improvements, the town of Hilliard, and a book about the development of truck farming in Northern Florida. I will set aside for you the nearest town lot to the Post Office and Public Square available at the time your coupon and $5.00 for reservation is received. The $5.00 will be applied on the purchase price of a farm and according to our contract you have 60 days in which to investigate and if every statement made by us is not exactly as represented you have your money back in accordance with our contract.

My offer to you and to you the full amount of the round trip ticket, Cincinnati to Hilliard, any day during February and March, on the purchase of one or more farms, is made so you can fully investigate this land to your entire satisfaction.

The winter tourist rates are in effect daily during February and March and you should take advantage of these rates any day to suit your convenience and arrangements will be made for your accommodation at our headquarters at Hilliard free of expense to you until you have seen the land and made a satisfactory investigation.

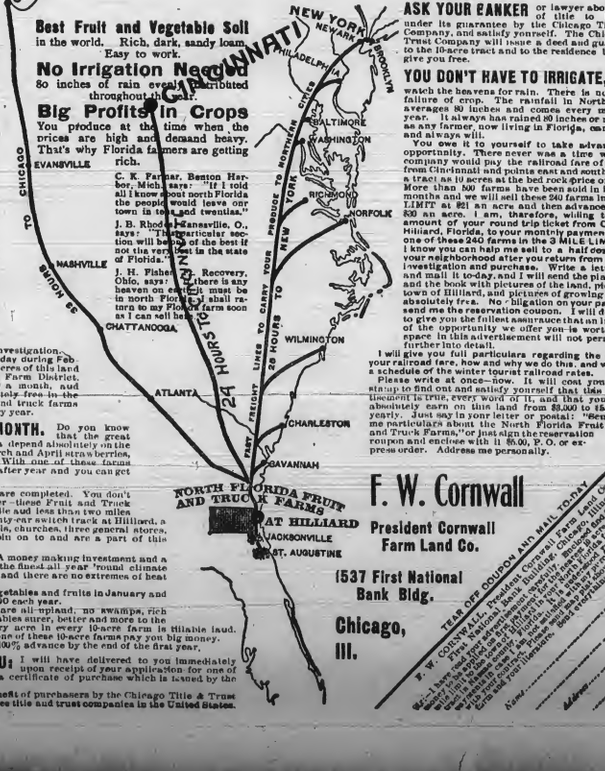
My proposition to pay your railroad fare is good any day during February and March. I will arrange so you can secure 10 acres of this land in the heart of the North Florida Fruit and Truck Farm District within the 3 MILE LIMIT, near Jacksonville, at $10 a month, and besides I will give you a building lot 25x125 feet absolutely free in the town of Hilliard adjoining these farms. Many fruit and truck farms in the Jacksonville district net $250 to $500 per acre every year.

THIS IS THE KIND YOU BUY AT $10 PER MONTH. Do you know that the great Atlantic Coast cities and cities as far west as Omaha depend absolutely on the Florida Fruit and Truck farms for early February, March and April strawberries, celery, Irish potatoes, cabbage, lettuce and radishes? With one of these farms you can have an income that can be depended on year after year and you can get it if you save just $10 a month.

NO INTEREST AND NO TAXES till payments are completed. You don't have to pioneer—these Fruit and Truck Farms are in the heart of civilization—near Jacksonville and less than two miles from the Atlantic Coast Line Ry., which has a big twenty-car switch track at Hilliard, a city with telegraph, long distance telephone, two schools, churches, three general stores, and these North Florida Fruit and Truck Farms join on to and are a part of this growing town.

WHAT TEN ACRES MEANS TO YOU: FIRST—A money making investment and a home in the finest all year 'round climate in the world. Northern Florida is warm in winter and there are no extremes of heat in summer.

SECOND—You can make a good living, eat June vegetables and fruits in January and sell your crops for cash, and earn from $3,000 to $5,000 each year.



THIRD—These North Florida Fruit and Truck Farms are all upland; no swamps, rich sand loam and will grow the finest fruits and vegetables surer, better and more to the acre than in any other section of the South. Every acre in every 10-acre farm is tillable land.

FOURTH—You don't have to know farming to make one of these 10-acre farms pay you big money.

FIFTH—You can hold it as an investment and sell at 100% advance by the end of the first year.

HERE IS WHAT MY COMPANY OFFERS YOU: I will have delivered to you immediately upon receipt of your application for one of these 10-acre North Florida Fruit and Truck farms a certificate of purchase which is issued by the Chicago Title & Trust Co.; capital $5,000,000.

The title to the entire tract is held in trust for the benefit of purchasers by the Chicago Title & Trust Company, one of the strongest, safest and best guarantee title and trust companies in the United States.

ASK YOUR BANKER or lawyer about the safety of title to land issued under its guarantee by the Chicago Title & Trust Company, and satisfy yourself. The Chicago Title & Trust Company will issue a deed and guarantee title to the 10-acre tract and to the residence lot which we give you free.

YOU DON'T HAVE TO IRRIGATE, fight crop pests, nor watch the heavens for rain. There is no chance for failure of crop. The rainfall in Northern Florida averages 80 inches and comes every month in the year. It always has rained 80 inches and more as long as any farmer, now living in Florida, can remember, and always will.

You owe it to yourself to take advantage of this opportunity. There never was a time when a land company would offer a railroad fare for a purchaser from Cincinnati and points east and south, of as small a tract as 10 acres at the bed rock price of $21 an acre. More than 500 farms have been sold in less than six months and we will sell these 240 farms in the 3 MILE LIMIT at $21 an acre and then advance the price to $30 an acre. I am, therefore, willing to apply the amount of your round trip ticket from Cincinnati to Hilliard, Florida, in monthly payments if you buy one of these 240 farms in the 3 MILE LIMIT, because I know you can help me sell to a half dozen others in your neighborhood after you return from your trip of investigation and purchase. Write a letter or postal and mail it to-day, and I will send the plat of the land and the book with pictures of the land, pictures of the town of Hilliard, and pictures of growing truck farms absolutely free. No obligation on your part to buy, or send me the reservation coupon. I will do everything to give you the fullest assurance that an investigation of the opportunity we offer you is worth while, but space in this advertisement will not permit me to go further into detail.

I will give you full particulars regarding the payment of your railroad fare, how and why we do this, and will send you a schedule of the winter tourist railroad rates.

Please write at once—now. It will cost you but a 2c stamp to find out and satisfy yourself that this advertisement is true, every word of it, and that you can absolutely earn on this land from $3,000 to $5,000 yearly. Just say in your letter or postal: "Send me particulars about the North Florida Fruit and Truck Farms," or just sign the reservation coupon and enclose with it $5.00, P. O. or express order. Address me personally.

THEY KNEW HOW TO WORK

BUT DON'T NEED TO WORK NOW SO HARD.

The experience of the Bisser Bros. in Western Canada is similar to that reported to every agent of the Canadian Government, whose advertisement appears elsewhere:

"Wheatwyn, Sask., Nov. 6th, 1903.

"To the Commissioner of Immigration, Winnipeg, Manitoba.—Dear Sir: I, in company with my brother and other relations, arrived in this country in the spring of 1893. At the time we got off the train at Wolseley, Sask., we had only a few dollars, not enough to start farming on our own account, so we were compelled to work out for a considerable time in order to make sufficient money to enable us to establish ourselves. When we thought we had enough money to start with, I and my brother took up one quarter-section (160 acres) land each in the Loon Creek district. In 1900 we moved on our homesteads with one team of horses and one walking plow. While I was engaged with the work in the field, my brother built a shack and barn of logs, which we have hauled during the time we were not able to work in the field. We were certainly working very hard, but I am glad to say that we made our fortune in this country. To-day we do not need to work so hard as we used to, as we have three men hired steady for whom we pay $30.00 to $40.00 a month, besides board and lodging during the summer time. I am also glad to tell you that to-day we are owners of a section and three-quarters of the best land, with first class buildings thereon, besides having all the necessary machinery. We always do our own threshing, for we have a 22 horse-power threshing outfit.

"Our success in farming in this country also enabled us to get rid of a number of horses of less value, and instead we bought 10 pure-bred mares, representing a value in the neighborhood of $5,000.

"Regarding raising grain, which is the main factor in our district, I am proud to say that we have always had good success. We have raised wheat as high as 35 bushels to the acre; and this year, although we suffered from lack of sufficient rain, our wheat went 27 bushels to the acre, and we had 900 acres in crop. We have broken this year about 100 acres new land, and by next year we will have about 1,110 acres in crop. For one carload of wheat which we have shipped a few weeks ago we got a price of 97 cents per bushel, and it graded as No. 2 Northern, although we have a quantity of wheat which will surely go as No. 1 Northern. During the six years we have been farming for ourselves we have never had one frost around here, so that we always had a good crop.

"I, for myself, feel compelled to say that our Great West is the land where a person who is willing to work and tran his hands to anything, can make a fortune, and a comfortable living. Our country is a thoroughly free country, and we have a good Government; and, as long as we have good crops, and a good Government, we are satisfied, and I think that is all we want.

"Yours very truly,

"LORENS BISSER,

"P. O. Wheatwyn, Sask."

Criminality of Waste.

If I wanted to train a child to be thrifty I should teach him to abhor waste. I do not mean waste of money; that cures itself, because very soon there is no money to waste—but waste of material, waste of something that is useful but that you cannot represent in money value to the waster. There is waste of water, waste of gas and things of that kind. If you would wish your children to be thrifty I would beg to impress upon them the criminality of waste.—Lord Rosebery, in an Edinburgh Address.

"Swore, did he?" inquired the parent, grimly, reaching for the slipper. "What did he say?"

"He said 'ain't,'" responded Katy, solmenly.—Success Magazine.

What Is Going on in Different Sections of Kentucky.

CAPITAL NOTES.

Bad Blow To Poolrooms.

The court of appeals in the cases of J. B. Respess, of Cincinnati, and Mary Bero and Alex Davezac, of Covington, against the Commonwealth of Kentucky, says that a court of equity has the right to enjoin owners of property from renting for purpose of gambling.

All in Good Shape.

Cabbell B. Bullock, formerly actuary in the office of the insurance commissioner, is here to make report to Commissioner Bell concerning a number of fire insurance companies, with headquarters in Louisville, which he has examined and finds in good condition.

Doesn't Entitle To Big Damages.

Holding that Mrs. Anna C. Rose, of Boyle county, is only entitled to expense incurred in missing a train because of misinformation by a Cincinnati Southern Railroad Co. employe, the court of appeals reversed a $950 judgment of lower court.

Judgment Reversed.

Judgments in the consolidated cases of the Ford Lumber and Manufacturing Co. against A. B. Asher, involving the payment on 1,400 trees, were reversed, the appellate court holding that Asher was in no wise injured, although contract was not lived up to.

As further inducement to settlement of the wheat-raising lands of Western Canada, the Canadian Government has increased the area that may be taken by a homesteader to 320 acres—160 free and 160 to be purchased at $3.00 per acre. These lands are in the grain-raising area, where mixed farming is also carried on with unqualified success. A railway will shortly be built to Hudson Bay, bringing the world's markets a thousand miles nearer these wheat-fields, where schools and churches are convenient, climate excellent, railways close to all settlements, and local markets good.

"It would take time to assimilate the revelations that a visit to the great empire lying to the North of us unfolded at every turn."—Correspondence of a National Editor, who visited Western Canada in August, 1903.

Lands may also be purchased from railway and land companies at low prices and on easy terms.

For pamphlets, maps and information as to low railway rates, apply to Superintendent of Immigration, Ottawa, Canada, or the authorized Canadian Government Agent:

Word has recently been received here of the marriage of Wallace Grant, who is employed in Mt. Carmel, Ill. His many Boone county friends extend congratulations.

Word has been received here of the sudden death of Mr. Gulsinger, who formerly resided here but now of Lebanon, Ohio. Death was due to a fall from the roof of a high building, which he was painting.

Death has again visited our town and taken one of our elderly ladies in the form of Mrs. Ally Delph. Mrs. Delph suffered a stroke of apoplexy on Tuesday afternoon never regaining consciousness, death relieveing her suffering at about 8 p. m., Wednesday. She had, apparently, been in good health and attended the Baptist services (of which church she was a faithful member) on Sunday night before her death. She was 61 years old and was born and raised in Boone county. She leaves a devoted husband and two daughters, Mrs. Chas. Peno and Mrs. Elija Acra, both of this place, besides several grandchildren, and one brother to mourn the death of a loving wife and mother. The community at large extends deepest sympathy to the bereaved ones. The funeral services were held Friday at 10 a. m., at the Methodist Church with interment at Bullittsburg cemetery.

The Secret of Long Life.

A French scientist has discovered one secret of long life. His method deals with the blood. But long ago millions of Americans have proved Electric Bitters prolongs life and makes it worth living. It purifies, enriches and vitalizes the blood, rebuilds wasted nerve cells, imparts life and tone to the entire system. It's a Godsend to weak, sick and debilitated people. "Kidney trouble had blighted my life for months," writes W. M. Sherman, of Cushing, Me., "but Electric Bitters cured me entirely." Only 50c at Bentler's drug store. Erlanger.

Coughs of Children

Especially night coughs. Nature needs a little help to quiet the irritation, control the inflammation, check the progress of the disease. Our advice is—give the children Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. Ask your doctor if this is his advice also. He knows best. Do as he says.

We publish our formulas
We banish alcohol from our medicines
Ayer's
We urge you to consult your doctor

If you think constipation is of trifling consequence, just ask your doctor. He will disabuse you of that notion in short order. "Correct it, at once!" he will say. Then ask him about Ayer's Pills. A mild liver pill, all vegetable.

Have any of our readers seen a recent copy of the Cincinnati Weekly Enquirer? If not, it will pay to send for a copy, if for no other purpose than to note its present great worth as an educator in all things that tend to make life prosperous, and home, the happiest place on earth.

The editor by asking its readers to criticise and suggest improvements; and following advice thus obtained is enabled to produce a paper that exactly fits needs of a family and a material aid to father, mother and children in reaching that higher level in social life, where content and comfort reigns supreme.

Father obtains ample information that guides in the where, when and how to regulate and increase the income from his efforts. The mother in management of household affairs, practical economy, government of children, and other duties that makes her toil a labor of love. Children's minds and hearts are freed from thoughts of questionable amusements and frivolities of life, and encouraged to emulate all that is helpful in planing for a useful future in life.

The Grand Idea being that; "As are our Homes, so will be the Community, State and Nation."

A most desirable help, is a nonsectarian sermon each week, as preached by that Biblical Student Pastor Chas. T. Russell; a forcible reminder of the spiritual and temporal rewards gained by righteous living as preferable to a Godless life that brings nought but misery to the home.

Other departments and features are above the ordinary, the unanimous verdict of its readers being: "The cleanest and best family Weekly known to them.

A learned doctor has discovered a sure cure for sin in a new drug, but we believe it's only a variation of the old idea. There are several drugs that will cure a man of sinning. One of them is cyanide of potassium; another is prussic acid; another is strychnine. Of course they stop a man's breath at the same time, a method that we believe to be the only sure way of curing a sinner, but the new cure permits him to live on and on without the desire for sin. I don't know that the new cure has been given a thorough trial. It cannot be lack of material, for the supply of sinners is the greatest, at present ever known, and all one has to do to be convinced is to read the daily papers. The larger cities show no signs of depletion.

WASHINGTON·LIFE·INCIDENTS

BY HERBERT F. JACKSON

WASHINGTON CROSSING THE DELAWARE. BY LEUTZE.

MARTHA WASHINGTON, BY GILBERT STUART

THOUGH the pages of American history are adorned with the names of many great men, none are brighter and more beautifully described in letters of chased gold than those of Washington and Lincoln. Students of history are divided in their judgment which of the two men is the greater. But it is not really important that this question be decided. Destiny planned a certain line of work for both men, and they did that work well. Their innate ability is only partly responsible for their success; it was their unselfishness and desire to do well whatever they undertook which helped them to succeed where others might have failed. If Lincoln deserves praise because necessity spurred him on to greatness, Washington deserves as much credit because he became great without being driven on by necessity. Destiny demanded a double role of Washington—she made him a soldier and a statesman, and he performed both well. His trials as president were almost as great as those he encountered as commander-in-chief of the army. He was placed at the head of a new form of government, and did not have precedents to guide him in his undertaking. It was his early training which taught him to think calmly and with judgment. His mind once made up, to act without fear.

He was born on the banks of the Potomac river in a farmhouse, though the house was far better than a log cabin, it was not the mansion it is supposed to have been. It was a large, roomy place, with a deep sloping roof and a big outside chimney at either end. He was one of many children. His father was rich in crops and land, though he had little real money. Most Virginia farmers planted tobacco, and when money was scarce they traded this product for food and clothing. His early years were spent on the farm, with plenty of exercise and little schooling. George loved to tramp across the fields, forests and to swim in the streams. His education was gained at a country school where he was taught for three hours a day. Limited as his education was, he was fond of reading, and he had a book into which he copied everything he wished to remember. In this book he put many rules which he himself had formulated. These are only a few of the many:

"Labor to keep alive in your breast that little spark of celestial fire called conscience."

"Think before you speak."

"Whisper not in the company of others."

Lawrence, one of the half-brothers, had been sent to England to school, and the parents had planned the same for George, but the father died suddenly, and Mrs. Washington realized she could not afford to send him across the ocean. The boy had spent considerable time on the wharf and talking to seamen had awakened a desire for adventure. These stories created a desire to earn a living as a sailor, and he suggested it to his mother. Mrs. Washington did not like the idea of having George leave home nor did she approve of his career. He was sent back to school to study surveying. When not studying he was training his company of boys to become soldiers, and he often got very impatient when they made mistakes.

Shortly after his brother Lawrence had married the daughter of Lord Fairfax a member of this family took a great interest in the boy. He had such a fancy for the lad he put him to surveying a large tract of land in the Shenandoah valley. Though the work was no easy task, he was so strong and enthusiastic he acquitted himself exceedingly well. He did not go alone—a boy, George Fairfax, went as his aid. They rather enjoyed the new experience of hunger, cold and facing Indian strategy. In later years George recalled his experience of roughing it in the Shenandoah valley with great pleasure. This work was suddenly interrupted by sickness in the family. Lawrence, his half-brother, was ill and the physicians sent him to the West Indies. George went along to keep him company, only to be taken with smallpox. Although Lawrence started for home, he died after his return.

This was a great shock to George, for the brothers were exceedingly devoted; but the sting of this loss was partly forgotten by a chance to go to the French who were [illegible] English territory. He was made major at the age of 22 and sent on a perilous journey of over a thousand miles. He had many narrow escapes in his journey over mountains, fording streams and through forests where Indians lay in hiding. After his interview with the French commander he started for home. The journey back was worse than going, for the rivers were exceedingly treacherous. The French governor refused to heed English commands and continued to build forts, so George Washington was appointed to command soldiers to march against the French in the spring. This was the beginning of a war between the French and English, which lasted seven years. Gen. Braddock was sent over from England and George was made a colonel and commanded the Virginia troops. Though Braddock was a capable general, he did not understand the art of fighting the Indians and refused to heed young Washington's advice. The general was shot in one of these engagements. With this the Redcoats began to run, but Washington tried to call them back. All day he was in the midst of the fight. Four bullets went through his coat and two horses were shot under him.

WASHINGTON AT TRENTON. BY FRED

WASHINGTON AND LAFAYETTE AT MT. VERNON. BY ROSSITER

The war at an end, Washington returned home. He was anxious to see his mother, whom he had not seen in some time. Though Mrs. Washington was not a brilliant woman, she had plenty of good judgment and common sense, and was always ready to give her son wise counsel. Proud though she was of her boy's energy and desire to serve his country she was careful not to spoil him by excessive praise. She loved to hear of the hazards of war, but she emphasized the dangers more than her boy's success.

Hardships and long-fought campaigns had done much to impair his health, and he went to Williamsburg to consult a physician. On this trip he met Mrs. Martha Custis, widow of Daniel Parke Custis, one of the wealthiest planters in the colony. They were married some five months later. Very little is known of her except that she was petite, pretty and exceedingly devoted to her husband. She was very proud of his successes, and used all her energy to make his trials as easy as she could. There are those who attribute Washington's first step upward to his marriage. This is certainly untrue, for he was on the road to success when he married her. Whenever Washington went on a long campaign his wife took up headquarters where she might be near him. These winterings gradually became a regular custom. She seldom complained, although she frequently had to put up with inconvenient headquarters. When Washington was chosen commander-in-chief of the army he did not accept the place with great eagerness, for he knew it was to be a long and hard fought war, and a position latent with responsibility. The struggle was as difficult as he imagined, for many times during the war the soldiers were ready to lay down their arms and go home, but his courage never failed him and he pushed on.

When the sky looked blackest he would plan some campaign to make of defeat a victory. A happy illustration of this was when one Christmas night the soldiers were quite ready to give up and go home. They were camping on the banks of the Delaware. Pointing to the other side, he said: "Our enemy is camping there." They were Hessian soldiers, and since it was Christmas night, they were celebrating. It was with difficulty the army crossed, for the night was wild, dark and cold. But in spite of the great blocks of ice on the river, Washington managed to get his army across, and a victory was the result. A more difficult year was spent in Valley Forge. It was a long, cold winter, the soldiers hungry for food, and they did not have enough clothing and blankets to keep themselves warm. Many times they were on the verge of mutineering. It was only by means of his tact and good judgment that he brought harmony into camp and gave the war a successful ending.

After leaving the army he went back home and spent much time improving the farm. The Mount Vernon estate gradually became an expensive affair. Here he kept open house, and never a day went by without his receiving callers and friends. Some of the dinners and levees were often elaborate, and he struggled hard not to appear bored. He had hoped to spend the rest of his life among these pleasant surroundings. He often told his friends: "Let those who wish such things as office be at the head of things. I do not wish them. All I desire now is to settle down at Mount Vernon and to enjoy my farm." But after the constitution was ratified and the votes of the electors were opened and counted it was found that everyone had voted for Washington. During his presidency he had many knotty problems, but he met them all with good sense and judgment. Because he played the double role of commander of the army and the first president of this nation equally well he is entitled to the name, the Father of His Country.

"END JUSTIFIES THE MEANS."

"The end justifies the means." This motto, from the coat-of-arms of Washington, will no doubt flash into the minds of certain admirers of the father of his country who glance at the genealogical tree, which is England's latest contribution to the oft-debated question of Washington's ancestry.

"Let no man fancy he knows sport," said the late Moncure D. Conway, "unless he has family treed an ancestor of George Washington." Yet, despite the many clever scholars and antiquarians of America who have tried their hands at this "sport," it has remained for a fellow of the Royal Historical society of England, Rev. Frederick W. Ragg, to convey to us the latest interesting revelation regarding the ancestry of our first president.

Barring those that champion the truly democratic standpoint, less prevalent to-day than it was in 1620, which scorns to connect itself with old world titles and abhors royalty, there remain many liberal souls among us who do not grudge to one who was acknowledged first in war and first in peace a share in the homage accorded the first family of England.

Edward I. was himself a mighty warrior, and first in many wars; his prowess was early exercised on the Turks, during the last crusade ever embarked on by England's kings, and when the throne became his own he successfully carried out his project of uniting England, Scotland and Wales. He brought the famous stone of Scone to Westminster abbey, and under him England became a mighty nation. He was a monarch wise and great, even though he had little leaning toward democratic government and did not display special fondness for Magna Charter. Edward Longshanks was not an ancestor to be despised by his descendant George, of kingly bearing and equally long legs.

That this direct line of descent has not until now been established may seem a bit surprising in view of the exhaustive research that has been devoted to the Washington ancestry. The reason is, however, not difficult to understand when one reflects that such research has been concerned exclusively with the male line, while this royal blood is introduced into the family by Margaret Butler, who married Laurence Washington in 1588.

Mr. Worthington Chauncey Ford and others who have made a special study of the Washington pedigree trace the line back to John Washington of Whitfield, five generations back of the aforesaid Laurence and his wife Margaret. These students state that this Margaret Butler was the daughter of William Butler of Tighes, Sussex, but do not follow the Butler pedigree back of this point. Here Mr. Ragg has taken up the quest, and after careful study of old records, tombstones, and entries in church registers has proved that William Butler, father of Mrs. Laurence Washington, stands tenth in direct descent from Edward I.

Reference to the above genealogical tree just completed by Mr. Ragg, and verified since its arrival in America by various genealogical experts, who have pronounced it satisfactory, will show conclusively that George Washington is in the sixteenth generation in direct descent from the monarch in question, and is, therefore, the great-great-great-great-great-great-great-great-great-great- great-great-great-great-great- grandson of Edward I. Plantagenet

MONEY MADE IN LIVE STOCK IN CENTRAL CANADA.

W. J. Henderson, visiting Seattle, writes the Canadian Government Agent at Spokane, Wash., and says:

"I have neighbors in Central Canada raising wheat, barley and oats for the past 20 years, and are now getting from the same land 20 to 30 bushels of wheat per acre, 40 to 60 bushels of oats.

"It was the first week of May when I got my tent pitched, but the farmers all around had finished putting in their crops, so I only got fifteen acres broke and seeded. They advised me as it was late not to put in much wheat, so I put in five acres of wheat and ten acres oats, one-half acre potatoes and vegetables. All kinds of vegetables grow well up there, sweet corn, tomatoes, onions, carrots, peas, beans, cabbage. My wheat yielded about 20 bushels per acre, for which I got 75 cents, others got 80 cents; oats threshed 35 bushels per acre, for which I got 35 cents per bushel. You see I was three weeks late in getting them in, still I was satisfied.

"From my observation, there is more money made in stock, such as cattle, horses and sheep, as prices are high for such, and it costs nothing to raise them, as horses live the year around out on the grass. In fact, farmers turn their work horses out for the winter, and they come in fresh and fat in the spring. Cattle live out seven or eight months. They mow the prairie grass and stack it for winter and give oat straw. My neighbors sold steers at $40 each, and any kind of a horse that can plow, from $150.00 up. I raised 60 chickens and 5 pigs, as pork, chickens, butter and eggs pay well and always a good market for anything a man raises, so I have every reason to be thankful, besides, at the end of three years I get my patent for homestead. I heard of no homestead selling for less than $2,000, so where under the sun could an old man or young man do better?"

YOUTHFUL MIND AT WORK.

Deduction Mother Must Have Found Somewhat Hard to Combat.

Miss Marjorie, aged five years, is one of those bright children who make the lives of their parents and teachers a burden. Quite recently she paid her first visit to a kindergarten. Upon her return home she grew enthusiastic, begging her mother to allow her to attend the school regularly.

"It was so very nice!" she declared sweetly. "And the teacher, Miss Lee, is so very nice, too! She told me if I was a good little girl I would grow up into a pretty lady, but if I was naughty I would grow up an ugly one!"

"That is quite true, dear," her mother answered with a smile.

Silently Miss Marjorie regarded the fire of pine logs. Presently she burst out: "Then what a naughty, naughty little girl Miss Lee must have been."—The Bohemian.

Easy Come, Easy Go.

A passerby at Broad and Lombard streets in Philadelphia once heard the following dialogue between a laborer who was digging in a sewer and a stout, beaming lady with a capacious market basket on her arm:

"Ah, good marnin' to you, Pat," said she leaning over and looking into the pit. "And what are you doin'?"

"Good marnin', Bridget," he replied, looking up. "I'm a-earnin' alimony for two. And what are you doin'?"

"Sure, I'm a-spendin' it," replied Bridget airily, as she trotted off.—Lippincott's.

Placing Him.

"Papa," inquired little May, after Sunday school, "was George Washington an Israelite?"

Before her father could answer this somewhat unexpected question May's six-year-old brother broke in.

"Why, May, I'm 'shamed of your ignance! George Washington is in the New Testament, not the Old."—Woman's Home Companion.

GOOD CHANGE

Coffee to Postum.

The large army of persons who have found relief from many chronic ailments by changing from coffee to Postum as a daily beverage, is growing each day.

It is only a simple question of trying it for oneself in order to know the joy of returning health as realized by an Ills. young lady. She writes:

"I had been a coffee drinker nearly all my life and it affected my stomach—caused insomnia and I was seldom without a headache. I had heard about Postum and how beneficial it was, so concluded to quit coffee and try it.

"I was delighted with the change. I can now sleep well and seldom ever have headache. My stomach has gotten strong and I can eat without suffering afterwards. I think my whole system greatly benefited by Postum.

"My brother also suffered from stomach trouble while he drank coffee, but now, since using Postum he feels so much better he would not go back to coffee for anything."

WHY HE WENT HOME.

Manners of New York Men Too Much for Southerner.

A tall, gray-haired man who unmistakably was from the south, stepped up to the desk of one of New York's best known hotels. "Heah is yo' key, suh," he said to the head clerk. "I was goin' to put up with you-all fo' some time, but am leavin' to-day."

"Well, colonel," said the head clerk, "if anything is unsatisfactory, we'll look into it at once—"

"No, suh; it isn't that. You-all have been very hospitable to me, I assuah you. But this city is a little too rough fo' me at my time of life."

"How is that?"

"Why, just fo' example, take this mawnin'. I was sitting in a subway cah, which was full, and some ladies entehed. They caught ahold and wuh swingin' from the straps; and as soon as I saw that the gentlemen they wuh in front of wuh goin' to let them swing, I got up and bowed, and offehed them my seat. And do you know, suh, while I was bowin' a young fellow dressed like a gentleman, suh, slid behind me and plumped right into my seat. Then everybody laughed—at me, suh—"

"But you are not going to leave New York on that account, are you?" asked the clerk.

"No, suh, not that alone; but just everything added togethuh. Now, last night a man bumped into my me hahd, on Broadway. Although I assuah you, suh, it was entiahly his fault, I tuhned and begged his pahdon, when I found, suh, that by that time he was knockin' down anothuh man futhuh down the street."

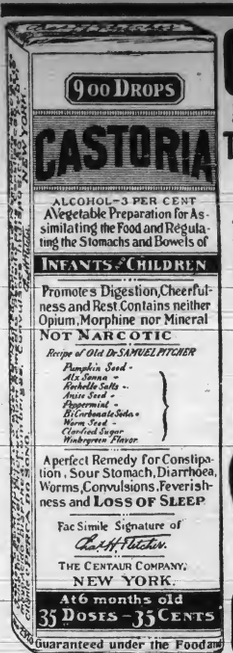
"And you think he should have stopped to apologize?"

"No, suh. No, suh, I don't—although I should have thought so onct. But I find that in New Yo'k they apologize less and have mo' occasion to than any place else in the wo'ld. I'm goin' back to a land where people, suh, are more mannerly and less brutal."—New York Press.

Our Earthquake Sufferers.

"I am sorry for the Italian sufferers," said the woman. "I am sorry for any sufferers, having suffered much myself, but we have had an earthquake ourselves, haven't we? That panic! And did any of the nations of the earth come to our rescue? I should think not. On the contrary, they deserted us, Italy particularly. I don't know how Ellis island is now, but I do know that the panic rendered it for a time a deserted village. We were like a sinking ship forsaken by the rats. I don't say we shouldn't help Italy all we can, but I do say that we should think a little of our poor of the East side and elsewhere, of the pitiful spectacle of our breadlines, of our own dark nights and our hollow streets through which our own poor wander from twilight till dawn."—New York Press.

Record of Canada's Trade.



Between 1877 and 1887 the trade of the Dominion with the United States increased less than $6,000,000; in the next decade it increased over $28,000,000, and in the ten years ending 1907 it increased $202,000,000. This increase in the progress of growth would be striking enough as it stands, but it becomes vastly more impressive when we observe that the growth of Canadian trade with Great Britain increased a little over $8,000,000 in the first decade, $17,000,000 in the second decade and $109,000,00 in the third decade.—Philadelphia Record.

Choate's Humorous Comparison.

Chief Justice Shaw of Massachusetts, one of the greatest lawyers of his time, was a plain, practical man, and looked in his old age, as he sat on the bench, somewhat like a Chinese idol, and he used frequently to cut off Mr. Choate's eloquence by calling him back to the plain facts. At a bar dinner Choate was called upon to toast the chief justice, and what he said was this: "We regard our chief justice as the heathen regards his idol. We know that he is ugly, but we feel that he is great."

Are the Six Candidates in The Popularity Contest this Week.

A Little Hustle on the Part of the Candidates May Make a Big Change Next Week.

The vote polled this week shows that the contestants have been on the jump for the last several days, and Miss Sadie Crisler has succeeded in closing the gap between her and Miss Jennie Aylor, while each of the other contestants is keeping close enough to make it possible for her to come down the home stretch and land the prize. There is plenty of material in the territory of each contestant to make a big showing any week she concludes to make a close canvass. To be voted the most popular lady school teacher in Boone county is an honor to be desired and appreciated by any lady, and, besides it will carry a nice present with it. The contest indicates it will be close. It will close at 12 o'clock midnight May 25th 1909.

Jennie L. Aylor	4350
Sadie Crisler	4350
Stella Carpenter	2550

President Roosevelt knocked out the anti-Japanese legislation undertaken by the California legislature.

W. J. Bryan had a narrow escape from death in an automobile accident near Tampa, Florida, one day last week.

Last Friday was Lincoln day, especially in Kentucky, for which the weather clerk provided a very indifferent article of weather.

Booze and race tracks have incurred the disfavor of a large element of legislators, and have become the object of adverse legislation in every direction, and in many of the States their going is only a question of time, and apparently only a short time at that.

When the people of Northern Kentucky thought, last Friday, that the earth was sinking beneath them, they would have understood the origin of the peculiar sensation had they paused to think. It was the result of the Roosevelt party entering Kentucky from Ohio on its way to Hodgensville.

A bill was passed by the U. S. Senate, last week, repealing the increase in the salary of the Secretary of State from $8,000 to $12,000 so as to permit Senator Knox to accept an appointment as Secretary of State under Mr. Taft. It will not be long after his induction into office before the larger salary will be restored.

The Kentucky Court of Appeals handed down an opinion last week which means a loss of thousands of dollars to tobacco growers and others whose crops and barns and other property were destroyed during the raids of night riders in the past two years. In reversing the Caldwell Circuit Court in the case of five insurance companies against the Imperial Tobacco Company, the court upheld the validity of the "riot clause" of policies written in Kentucky, and held that the raids of the night riders come within the meaning of the term "riot." The Imperial Tobacco Company sued to recover for insurance carried on tobacco and barns destroyed by night riders at Princeton, Caldwell county, November 30, 1906. The lower court gave judgment for insurance.

Bersford, after which the remains were placed in the vault in the Odd-Fellows cemetery to await final interment in the family lot near by.

B. E. Aylor, of Hebron, called in yesterday and planted an advertisement of a lot of personal property at public sale on the afternoon of the 27th inst.

EFFECTIVE RECIPE.

Home-Made Kidney, Bladder and Rheumatism Medicine for Readers.

Here is a simple home-made mixture as given by an eminent authority on Kidney diseases, who makes the statement that it will relieve almost any case of Kidney trouble if taken before the stage of Bright's disease. He states that such symptoms as lame back, pain in the side, frequent desire to urinate, especially at night; painful and discolored urination, are readily overcome. Here is the recipe. Try it:

These ingredients are all harmless and easily mixed at home by shaking well in a bottle. This mixture has a peculiar healing and soothing effect upon the entire Kidney and Urinary structure, and often overcomes the worst forms of Rheumatism in just a little while. This mixture is said to remove all blood disorders and cure Rheumatism by forcing the Kidneys to filter and strain from the blood and system all uric acid and foul, decomposed waste matter, which cause these afflictions. Try it if you aren't well. Save the prescription.

W. W. Grimsley, who resides on the Ohio river, near the mouth of Big Bone creek, has not abandoned the idea of having a bridge constructed across Big Bone creek at or near a point known as the Fish Trap. Big Bone creek at that point being the line between Boone and Gallatin counties the law provides that each county shall contribute to the cost of the bridge in proportion to its taxable wealth, but Gallatin county contends that the bridge is not so much a public necessity as Mr. Grimsley and other Boone county people claim, and refuses to cooperate with Boone in its construction. The courts have been appealed to to settle the contention, and it may be some time before the fate of the proposed bridge is known.

At the last examination of common school pupils held in this county, January 28th and 29th, there was a colored girl among the applicants. She was 17 years old and is a pupil of the colored school at Walton. Superintendent Snyder gave her a room other than that occupied by the white pupils. She, with all but two of the white applicants, failed.

The RECORDER received a very interesting letter from Ensign Walter H. Lassing, one day last week. The letter was written from Bluefields, Nicaragua, under date of January 26, 1909. While it contains nothing about the doings of the navy, he forbids its publication. From the tone of the letter Ensign Lassing is well pleased with his life in the navy.

If you desire information as to the disposition of the 1907 road fund in this county, you can acquire it by reference to the settlement with the sheriff on that account, published elsewhere. It shows by whom and in what amounts the money was applied to the several public roads in the county.

W. L. Kirkpatrick bought of the estate of the late F. Riddell, one day last week, the land east of town and joining the Old-Fellows' cemetery on the south and west. On the land is one of the handsomest building sites near Burlington, and on it it is understood Mr. Kirkpatrick will erect a modern residence at an early date.

Stock men should send in orders for their bills at once so the work can be done and ready for them by the first of April. It requires time in which to do such work, all of which may come to the office the same day, but all of which cannot be done at the same time. First come, first served.

Although there has been no weather this winter calculated to destroy the peach crop, yet it is freely predicted that it will be a failure again this year, the prediction being based on the belief that the long drought of last year left the trees in a barren condition.

Things have been quite lively up about the Presbyterian church, for several days, the local literary association having the building repaired some, and the auditorium arranged for the entertainments it expects to give in the future.

Alarm Clocks at Clarks. tf.

Next Monday will be Washington's birthday.

Mrs. Blanton Pope, who had quite a severe attack of typhoid fever, has about recovered.

R. W. Clark, jeweler, and Atty. D. E. Castleman, were looking after business in Cincinnati, last Friday.

Estimates place this year's crop of white burley tobacco at 100,000,000 pounds, which is some of the weed, sure.

There has been no good weather for operating a sugar camp this year, and the season will be short unless future conditions are unusual.

Many peach trees are reported dead and the supposed cause of so many deaths of that class of fruit trees is the long drought of last year.

William Kirkpatrick has had the timber sawed for the construction of a slaughter house. He will have it up and ready for use in the next few weeks.

Mr. and Mrs. Dudley Rouse expect to witness the inauguration of Mr. Taft. While east they will visit several of the principal cities of that part of the country.

The near approach of the next term of the Boone circuit court, has made no perceptible increase of legal business, and everything is quiet up about the temple of justice.

After recuperating several days at Milan, Indiana, Jesse Kirkpatrick returned home last Thursday and is pursuing the even tenor of his way again with saw and hammer.

The fancier who will originate a breed of chickens that can be relied on as egg producers at the periods when other breeds have suspended business, will soon be a greater money king than John D. Rockefeller.

W. E. Vest, real estate agent, of Walton, came down, last Thursday, with a couple of gentlemen to whom he hoped to sell the James Kelly and Bart Aylor farms two and three miles respectively west of Burlington.

Mrs. Mary Hume, of Mudlick, was an interested witness of the work in progress in this office last press day. It is seldom that the RECORDER has as venerable a caller from such a distance, but they are always very welcome.

So far the ground hog winter has not been very severe, and there are not many more weeks in which cold weather of consequence can be expected. Of course there will be occasional periods of two or three days that will cause people to enjoy good fires, and winter clothing, and to do some grumbling about the meanest weather they ever saw.

W. H. Phipps, who resides down on Middle creek, is circulating a petition asking the United States to appropriate $1,000 to each mile of turnpike hereafter built in this Congressional district. If Uncle Sam can be pursuaded to make such a contribution it will assist materially in the improvement in the roads in this part of the country.

INDIGESTION ENDS.

Misery from your Disordered Stomach goes in Five Minutes.

You can eat anything your stomach craves without fear of a case of Indigestion or Dyspepsia, or that your food will ferment or sour on your stomach if you will occasionally take a little Diapepsin after eating.

Your meals will taste good, and anything you eat will be digested; nothing can ferment or turn into acid or poison or stomach gas, which causes Belching, Dizziness, a feeling of fullness after eating, Nausea. Indigestion (like a lump of lead in stomach), Biliousness, Heartburn, Water brash, Pain in stomach and intestines or other symptoms.

Headaches from the Stomach are absolutely unknown where this effective remedy is used. Diapepsin really does all the work of a healthy stomach. It digests your meals when your stomach can't. Each triangule will digest all the food you can eat and leave nothing to ferment or sour.

Get a large 50-cent case of Pape's Diapepsin from your druggist and start taking today and by tomorrow you will actually brag about your healthy, strong Stomach, for you then can eat anything and everything you want without the slightest discomfort or misery, and every particle of impurity and Gas that is in your stomach and intestines is going to be carried away without the use of laxatives or any other assistance.

Horace Hewitt, the Aurora sewing machine man had rather an expensive experience, last Friday morning. He drove up in front of a house in Burlington and left the animal attached to his buggy unhitched while he went in. The animal stood a few minutes, when it started out the Petersburg pike at full tilt, dumping a sewing machine out of the vehicle and leaving numerous pieces of the vehicle along the pike as an index to the course taken. About two miles from town the animal fell, and got into a position that prevented it from getting up, and thus it was found by Bert Gaines, who released and took charge of it until the owner arrived.

Smoke is beginning to ascend in every direction throughout Kentucky and the sowing of numerous, large tobacco beds is the work that is engaging the attention of the growers. In some localities there is said to be a scarcity of new tobacco seeds, and in many instances seeds grown years ago are being used, and there is some apprehension that plants will not be very plentiful in beds where old seed are relied on.

It is believed that if a bridge is constructed to span Middle creek at the public road crossing between Belleview and Rabbit Hash, that a rural mail route will be established from the latter place, which will wipe Belleview off the map in so far as postal matters are concerned. At present Belleview receives mail about 9 a. m. each day, while under the system above mentioned its mail would be delayed until afternoon.

Miss Catharine Ghanling, of Bellevue, was the guest of Miss Emma Adams, a few days last week. She is the lady who nursed Miss Emma Adams and Mrs. Legrand Gaines each through a severe case of illness. She was on her way from Otis Rouse's, where she had been nursing a sick child.

The two-year-old child of John Davis and wife, of Limaburg neighborhood, died last Thursday and was interred in the Odd-Fellows' cemetery last Saturday morning. A short funeral service was conducted at the residence by Rev. Allie Stith, of the Baptist church.

Hear that Carl Price, of Idlewild neighborhood, was offered for the farm on which he resides, one day last week, a price, which if accepted would have yielded him a profit of $3,200. Mr. Price evidently thinks he has a good thing or he would have taken the price offered him.

The temperance element in Ohio county, Indiana, is lining up for a vote on the whisky question at an early date. Rising Sun has what seems to be a pretty formidable anti-saloon organization, which is taking the lead in the contemplated fight.

Land that has been broken in the last few months will work nicely if there are no heavy rains to beat it down during this and next month. Those who have been plowing were surprised to see the ground turn up in such a live, mellow condition.

The Commercial Club will probably effect arrangements for installing a ferry from Petersburg, Ky., to this side of the river with a landing just south of the city.—Lawrenceburg Press.

W. E. Rice, of Belleview neighborhood, was in town, last Friday and planted in these columns an advertisement of the sale of his personal effects. See the ad.

Legrand Utz, of Limaburg neighborhood, was in Burlington, Saturday, and reported the appearance of several lambs in his flock of sheep.

"Toronto Jimmie" was acquitted by the Grant county circuit court, of the charge of robbing the Corinth bank several years ago.

It is too late in the season for long cold spells—a few days at a time will be the extent of real cold weather from now on.

James Carroll, of Cincinnati, and N. W. Burkett and Warner Senior, of Union, were guests of B. F. Hume, last Friday.

Henry Jergin has bought the Robinson farm of 70 acres at the top of the hill near Constance, paying therefor $7,000.

Mrs. Mary Hume returned home last Friday, after a visit of several days with her son, B. B. Hume and wife.

Remember the oratoracle contest which will take place in Burlington on the night of Friday the 26th.

There has been some March weather in this month, probably borrowed to be paid for later on.

Does Not Color Hair

Ayer's Hair Vigor, as now made from our new improved formula, does not stain or color the hair even to the slightest degree. Gray hair, white hair, blonde hair is not made a shade darker. But it certainly does stop falling hair. No question about that.

Does not change the color of the hair.

Ask him about it, then do as he says

Indeed, we believe it will stop every case of falling hair unless there is some very unusual complication, something greatly affecting the general health. Then you should consult your physician. Also ask him about the new Ayer's Hair Vigor.

UNION, KY., Feb. 6th, 1909.

Resolutions of sympathy and respect adopted by Boone Union Lodge No. 304, F. & A. M., at a regular meeting held February 6, 1909:

Whereas, Sickness, sorrow and death have been prevalent for twelve months past in the jurisdiction of Boone Union Lodge, and the Supreme Architect of the universe in His infinite wisdom, has removed from among us Brothers Geo. W. Popham and M. L. Houston and other honored and respected citizens, both male and female, therefore be it

Resolved, 1st. That in the death of Bro. Geo. W. Popham, who departed this life January 22, 1908, aged 62 years, we recognize that we have lost one of our most highly respected members, who had faithfully served for 35 years and a regular attendant at our stated meetings. We extend to the relatives and friends our warmest sympathy in their loss of an honest and upright man and faithful friend.

2nd. That in the death of Bro. M. L. Houston who departed this life June 24th, 1908, Boone Union Lodge No. 304, F. & A. M., has lost a devoted member and his children a kind and indulgent father, and to them the members of this Lodge extend their heartfelt sympathy in their loss.

3d. That in the death of our Sister Florence Stevenson, who was called to her higher and blessed home Dec. 25, 1908, the wife of our fraternal Brother Geo. H. Stevenson, we recognize the loss of a devoted wife and a kind and loving mother, who leaves a husband, one son and six daughters, and to them we express and tender our deepest heartfelt sympathies in their sad bereavement, and commend them to the care and guidance of Him who doeth all things for the best.

4. That in the death of M. C. Norman who departed this life Dec. 31, 1908, aged 76 years, we recognize that we have lost one of our oldest and best citizens—a christian gentleman in every sense that the word implies, devoted to his church, active in Sunday school work, a wise and safe counselor, patriotic, true to his government and just to his country and progressive in every good word and work, both religious and political. Bro. Norman left a wife and four daughters and six sons to mourn his death, but not without hope. Four of his sons B. L., A. H., V. Y. and E. O. Norman are worthy members of Boone Union Lodge F. & A. M., and to them we extend our fraternal and individual sympathy, and to Mrs. Norman and family we express our sorrow and sympathy with them in their loss of a kind and loving husband and father.

5. That we express to our Bro. J. P. Dunbar, who has been languishing on a bed of sickness, both of mind and body for over one year past and extend to him and family our deepest sympathy in their afflictions, and especially do we extend to our Bro. Harry Cromwell, our sympathy and thanks for his devotion and long and constant attention to Bro. Dunbar during his long sickness.

5. That we extend to Bro. W. W. Conner and daughter, our kindest sympathy in their present sickness, hoping that they may soon be restored to health and that Bro. Conner may ere long be able to have his name recorded at our regular meetings.

May the Grand Architect of the universe again smile upon us in usual health and at last accept each of us as a corner stone, duly and truly prepared for the builders use.

That a copy of this be spread upon record, a copy sent to the bereaved and afflicted and a copy to the Boone County RECORDER.

Helping Our Neighbors.

That which stands out bright and shining above all the tragedy of the Italian earthquake is the world-wide and instant response to the need of the suffering survivors. The calamity itself was neither new nor strange, unless, perhaps, in its magnitude. Sicily and Calabria have been often visited by disastrous earthquakes, both in ancient times and recently. Since the beginning of the present century, still less than ten years old, the great cities of San Francisco and Valparaiso, in the western hemisphere, have been destroyed by seismic upheavals, to say nothing of the wiping out of St. Pierre, with all its population, by the eruption of Mont Pelee, in the island of Martinique. At the time of each of these great cataclysms the rest of the world contributed to the relief of the sufferers, and once again the draft on human sympathy has been honored, says the Youth's Companion. Not only did Italian warships and the Italian king and queen start for the scene of the earthquake as soon as news of it reached Rome, but British, French and Russian squadrons in the Mediterranean headed at full speed for the help of the stricken country. This was government aid. The people, the men and women, in Europe, Asia, Africa and both Americas, were equally prompt in offering their money for the purchase of food, clothing and shelter, that the widowed and the orphaned might not go uncomforted. The human heart is wondrous kind, and there is no surer way to make it beat with helpful sympathy than to disclose to it the existence of suffering. It has answered the old question of the lawyer, "And who is my neighbor?" by including within that intimate and friendly fellowship all those in need the world over.

A parish priest in Ireland recently informed the department of agriculture at Washington that 12 farmers in his neighborhood having contributed a dollar apiece, he bought 12 good books on agriculture and horticulture, and thus established a small loan library which has done excellent service. Secretary Wilson now plans to develop a similar idea. He invites both country clergymen and physicians to take the initiative, and volunteers to advise what books shall be purchased, and to supply such libraries with department publications. Under these conditions, a small amount of money will go a long way; and the farmers who invest it may feel sure that they, too, are progressing.

Investors in gold-mining securities will be interested to learn that an American lady computed not long ago that in the United States alone half a ton of pure gold, equivalent to $500,000, is annually put as filling into the teeth of the living. Inasmuch as none of this precious metal is ever extracted after death, the shrewd calculator further reckoned that at the rate stated a quantity of gold equal to all that is now in circulation will, in the course of three centuries, be lying in the ground again. It is strange to think that one digger—the sexton, to-wit—is constantly returning to mother earth nearly as much gold as the other digger is constantly extracting from her bosom.

A steamer loaded with petroleum from the Standard Oil Company took fire in the harbor of Singapore, and when all attempts to extinguish the fire failed, the harbor agents appealed to the commander of the fortifications to sink the vessel. It was two miles away, but a few well-directed shots from the six-inch guns sent the ship to the bottom. Thus do warlike weapons have their victories no less profound than the implements of peace.

Mrs. Charlotte Perkins Stetson Gilman ought to rise to protest against the government's expected argument that when Mrs. Chan l. Ying, the pretty Chinese woman now being held by the authorities on the charge of being unlawfully in this country, left her husband she became a "laborer." Mrs. Gilman's contention recently has been precisely opposite.

It makes a lot of difference where you're born. A theatrical manager was looking for a Cinderella with a foot tiny enough to fit the slipper. A Maryland girl, of course, was the only one found who could fill the bill, remarks the Baltimore American. Had she been born in Chicago——.

In Spain about the only kind of plow in use is a primitive wooden affair with one handle and a tongue. To this is hitched a pair of small oxen or mules yoked up like oxen. The driver rests his right foot on a rear extension to keep the plow from jumping out of the ground, steadying himself by touching his left foot when about to lose his balance.

BARREN KENTUCKY FARM FOR A DAY BECOMES CAPITAL OF NATION—MEN OF MANY SECTIONS PRESENT—CORNER-STONE OF MEMORIAL HALL LAID BY PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT—WILLIAM H. TAFT WILL DEDICATE COMPLETED BUILDING IN APRIL—IMPORTANT EVENTS IN LINCOLN'S LIFE.

Lincoln Farm, Hodgensville, Ky., Feb. 12.—The common people, whom "God must love, because he made so many of them," had much to do Friday with making a success of the laying of the corner-stone of the Lincoln Memorial by President Roosevelt on the old Lincoln farm, near this town.

The great of the earth were here. There was represented immense wealth, brilliant statesmanship and splendid military. It was a brilliant pageant that marched up the road to the emancipator's birthplace Friday morning—a most miserable country road Thursday, but Friday a three-mile cinder path, five feet wide.

The roads to Hodgensville were choked with vehicles Friday morning, bearing Lincoln's own people, coming to do honor to his memory at his birthplace, and to shake the hands of the nation's present ruler.

Standing at the door of the historic Lincoln cabin, Theodore Roosevelt met many of them and spoke to them.

There was introduced to him Solomon Bales, famous as the double of Lincoln, for this land, always unyielding and very lonely, has produced many prototypes of Larue county's president—a race of angular, tall, high-cheekboned, sad-faced men.

"Uncle Jimmy" Smith, 70, of patriarchal appearance, who, older inhabitants say, is a distant relative of Honest Abe, was in the crowd, clamoring for an introduction, and "Sallie" Hines, 70, who, tradition says, is the granddaughter of a woman who was a girlhood chum of Nancy Hanks, had been promised she would be allowed to meet the president's wife and daughter, Ethel.

It was a great day for Lincoln's common people.

In the old log house on the Lincoln farm, where now lives Wm. C. Ragsdale, the man who is running the farm, the red and white table cloth gave way to pure white, Friday, and in the simply furnished rear room that serves both as kitchen and dining-room the president and his family took luncheon.

The president and his party arrived here at 11 o'clock from Louisville. The party consisted of the president, Mrs. Roosevelt, Miss Ethel Roosevelt, Secretary of War Luke Wright, Secretary Loeb, Surgeon General Rixey, Capt. A. W. Butt, T. H. Netherland, of the executive offices, and O. T. Boyd, of the Pennsylvania railroad.

There was a great throng at the little wooden railway depot when the train came in.

The party entered closed carriages, imported from Louisville, for Hodgensville's supply of vehicles is limited to double-seated shays and such.

Followed by carriages containing ex-Gov. Folk, of Missouri, president of the Lincoln Farm association; Clarence Mackay, president of the Postal Telegraph Co., and treasurer of the association; Robt. Collier, who bought the Lincoln farm in the name of the association, and Lloyd James, Collier's personal representative, the party started up the hill to the farm.

Mackay, Collier, Jones and a corps of Collier men came in a private car from New York, and this private car is the wonder of Hodgensvilleites.

Escorted by Company C, of Louisville, of the Kentucky National guard, dressed in its best, the procession wended its way over the old road, that, it is said, was built before Lincoln was born.

Before the days of Lincoln's fame it was known as Magnolia pike. Now they call it Lincoln road, and if the plans of the farm association go through, it will soon be Lincoln boulevard.

At the doors of huts along this road stood scores of the people whom Lincoln had liberated. Pictures of "Father Abraham" adorned the outer walls of their homes—squalid little shacks, not much better than the 100-year-old cabin "on the top of the hill."

Ex-slaves walked here and rode behind dinky little mules from miles about, and formed the rear guard of the presidential procession. "Uncle Toms," they call these men here.

At the scene of the ceremonies straw had been strewn thick. Over this tents were set for the protection of honored guests.

On old rough hewn school benches, 50 years old, and carved with the initial of two generations of boys, the distinguished company was seated. The benches flanked each side of the speakers' stand. A more primitive setting for a great occasion could not be imagined.

Close to these lay the corner-stone of the new memorial temple in its bed of mortar, and a derrick was manned, ready to raise the high stone into place when the president had spread the cement on its broad side with the silver trowel, which lay upon the rostrum.

Silence and something of the significance of the event fell upon the assemblage when the invocation was delivered, and following this former Gov. Joseph Folk, of Missouri, who is president of the Lincoln Memorial association, uttered some introductory remarks, telling the purpose of the association. He was followed by President Roosevelt, who laid the corner-stone, putting into its receptacle appropriate papers, which were sealed by Nicholas Kcenigstein, of Hodgensville, and the stone raised into place. The president yielded to Gov. Willson, who spoke on behalf of Kentucky for her greatest son. Gen. James Grant Wilson, for the federal army, and Gen. Luke E. Wright, for the confederate army, were then heard. William H. Taft, in April, will dedicate the completed memorial hall.

HIS MOTHER STATE

KENTUCKY'S CLAIM TO HONOR IN MEMORY OF LINCOLN.

Gov. Willson, for His Commonwealth, Puts Forward Plea in Eulogy of Statesman's Great Work in Uniting Nation.

Hodgenville, Ky.—Gov. Willson of Kentucky, in his address at the dedication of the Lincoln Memorial, said in part:

To the president of the United States, the commonwealth of Kentucky, one of the first twain daughters of the union, and all of her people, give most cordial salute and welcome, and not less to Theodore Roosevelt, first citizen, loved, trusted and honored of the people. To all of the people of the union here splendidly represented, our distinguished visitors and guests, and to the men of the Lincoln Farm association, we give greeting and rejoice to have you with us in Kentucky and to join you in this endeavor and in all the inspirations and associations of this time and place.

We have met here on this farm, where he was born, in memory of Abraham Lincoln, to know for ourselves and to prove to the world, by a record made to endure, and deep graven on these acres, that the love of country and of its nobly useful citizens are not dreams, nor idle words, but indeed living, stirring and breathing feelings. Abraham Lincoln is claimed by all humanity and all lips as the type of the race best showing forth the best in all men in all conditions of life.

Our whole country claims him as the son of the whole union. Illinois says: "He was mine, the man of Illinois; here on my prairies he ripened into noble manhood and here he made his home."

Indiana, too, says: "He was mine. In my southern hills the little child grew strong and tall." And each is right and true.

But Kentucky says: "I am his own mother. I nursed him at my breast; my baby born of me. He is mine!" Shall any claim come before the mother?

All over this land the people are meeting to-day to honor the one hundredth year's return of his birthday. And we are met in his birthplace to pledge anew the love of all the people of our land for each other and to show forth now and year by year, our love and reverence for the man, the soul, the life, which more than any in all the lives of all the earth, in all the ages, stands out as the very type and sight of human nature in its best loved and its noblest vision.

He came from the rugged but man-making school of poverty and hardship, with all man's lot of toil and trial, of sorrow and storm, unto the end that he, most kindly and homelike of friendly neighbors, should stand out great, and alone to lead a mighty people and a noble land safe through a storm of mortal strife and danger, to the blessings of union and peace under the constitution and the law. He came to give liberty to every soul in all our broad domain to the glory of God and all our land for all the ages.

As he said for the soldiers at Gettysburg: "We cannot dedicate, we cannot consecrate this ground." We meet here in Kentucky on the farm where he was born to be consecrated and dedicated, in the grace of beauty of his great spirit, to the work of upholding and keeping safe our union, which he so nobly led and helped to save. And when we try to tell the story of his life and work and his prophetic sayings, we find that nearly 50 years ago, as one inspired of God, he foresaw all and spoke all that we can say or think here, better and sweeter than mortal man could ever speak again.

To him more than any other man, we owe and shall for all time owe the joy, the power, and the gift of grace of a mighty people joined together as they never were before, under one flag and one covenant of the law.

For him there is no need of any memorial place or token. He lives and will forever live in the hearts of all the people of all the earth as the man of the people, grand in simple, noble dignity, almost strange in wisdom and prophetic foresight as if it were a gift direct from God. Simple and tender in life and feeling as a child ready to enter into the Kingdom of Heaven, yet brave as a spirit of truth, immovable from right purpose, blessed with a humor such as to no man else was ever given, which turned aside wrath and softened the rigor of mortal strife, his courage and his work breathed life and hope and faith until it came to pass that in the fiery furnace of a mighty war, hate and strife melted into the pure gold of union.

Here are met to-day, with equal zeal to do him honor, soldiers of the war for and against the union; heroes of the union and the confederacy, Americans all, no one less pledged than the other, not only by the bond of the covenant of our law, but alike by the dearest feelings of his heart and fervor of his blood, to our united country and its beautiful flag.

Oh, God of our Fathers, look down upon our land and bless us all, strengthen the bonds of our affection and help us forever to keep the covenant of peace on earth and good will to man.

Vitality of the Turtle.

The vitality of this strange sea-creature after decapitation is almost beyond belief. A large turtle was once sent to a hotel in Newcastle. The chef cut the turtle's head off and hung the body upside down to bleed. Twenty-four hours after that turtle knocked down a man cook with one blow of its fin! The gren turtle is not a vicious creature to handle, like its snapping Japanese brother, but its fins are very strong, and one blow from them is quite sufficient to break a man's arm.—World Wide Magazine

BLACKMAILERS AND EX-CONVICTS

Declared Representative Lovering, Instigated Stories of Fraud and Corruption—Says Their Names Have Been Brought Before Grand Juries.

Washington, Feb. 13.—That Representative Rainey of Illinois, got from The New York World his information regarding the Panama affairs which formed the subject of his recent speech, and that ex-convicts instigated the stories of fraud and corruption pertaining to acquirement of title by the United States to the property was the charge made in the house of representatives by Mr. Lovering, of Massachusetts.

"Maybe," he said, "The World did not originate all the scandalous stories it published, but its columns were public and we do know that The World did give credence and circulation to them."

Mr. Lovering declared that "the perpetrators of these false statements are known and the story of their doings reveals a chapter in the history of blackmailing that is rare in the annals of crime. These men are known. Their names are known; their aliases are known; their haunts are known, and their plans are known."

"Does the gentleman object to stating who they are?" inquired Mr. Burleson of Texas.

Mr. Lovering protested that he was laboring under great difficulty because of the absence of Mr. Rainey from the chamber. He admitted that he did notify the Illinois gentleman that ho was to speak on this subject.

"I want to say," he said, "that these men have been run down and brought to book, and it turns out that many of them are ex-convicts and they stand a good chance of returning to the penitentiary."

He was pressed by Mr. Shackleford of Missouri for information as to who these convicts were, but Mr. Lovering would go no further than to state that before long they would be produced in court.

Their names, he said, had been brought before the grand juries both in Washington and New York, and at the proper time would become known to the general public.

"How do you happen to be familiar with the secrets of the grand juries?" Mr. Shackleford asked, but before he could answer Mr. Gaines of Tennessee inquired if he was not a warm personal friend of William Nelson Cromwell.

Mr. Lovering admitted that he was. Responding to questions by Mr. Shackleford, the Massachusetts member said he possibly was not a client of Mr. Cromwell, but that he was a member of a corporation that retained his services. He refused to say how long Mr. Cromwell had been so employed, merely stating that he was not putting himself in the position of being interrogated by a court of justice.

IN AGONY WITH ECZEMA.

Whole Body a Mass of Raw, Bleeding, Torturing Humor—Hoped Death Would End Fearful Suffering.

In Despair; Cured by Cuticura.

"Words cannot describe the terrible eczema I suffered with. It broke out on my head and kept spreading until it covered my whole body. I was almost a solid mass of sores from head to foot. I looked more like a piece of raw beef than a human being. The pain and agony endured seemed more than I could hear. Blood and pus oozed from the great sore on my scalp, from under my finger nails, and nearly all over my body. My ears were so crusted and swollen I was afraid they would break off. Every hair in my head fell out. I could not sit down, for my clothes would stick to the raw and bleeding flesh, making me cry out from the pain. My family doctor did all he could, but I got worse and worse. My condition was awful. I did not think I could live, and wanted death to come and end my frightful sufferings.

"In this condition my mother-in-law begged me to try the Cuticura Remedies. I said I would, but had no hope of recovery. But oh, what blessed relief I experienced after applying Cuticura Ointment. It cooled the bleeding and itching flesh and brought me the first real sleep I had had in weeks. It was as grateful as ice to a burning tongue. I would bathe with warm water and Cuticura Soap, then apply the Ointment freely. I also took Cuticura Resolvent for the blood. In a short time the sores stopped running, the flesh began to heal, and I knew I was to get well again. Then the hair on my head began to grow, and in a short time I was completely cured. I wish I could tell everybody who has eczema to use Cuticura. Mrs. Wm. Hunt, 135 Thomas St., Newark, N. J., Sept. 28, 1908."

Overdoing It.

A young Englishman, after he had been in Devil's valley for a couple of months, began to grow thin. Wyoming cooking did not appeal to him. Besides his squeamish appetite there was another thing that the natives held against him—his outlandish custom of taking a bath every morning. One day his landlady was discussing him with a friend.

"I tell ye what, Sal," said the visitor, "he's jest a-wastin' away a-grievin' for some gal back east thar."

"Nothin' o' the kind," said the landlady, contemptuously. "You mark my words, now—that young feller he's jest a washin' hisself away."—Everybody's Magazine.

LIFE AND WORKS ACCORDED PRAISE

NATION'S MEN OF WORTH IN TRIBUTE TO ABRAHAM LINCOLN.

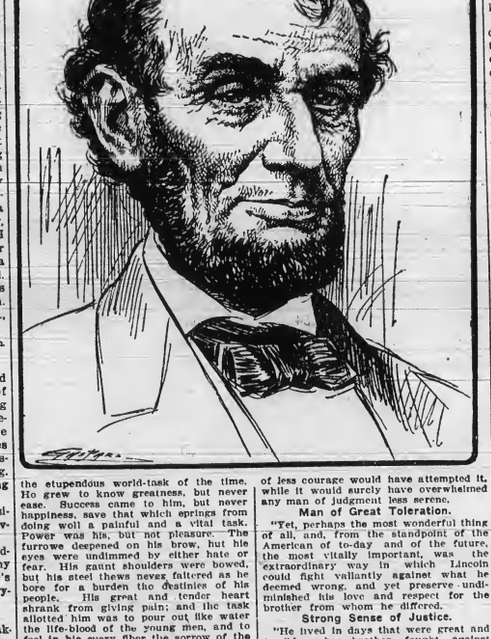
PRESIDENT MAKES ADDRESS

Qualities and Deeds of the Great President Set Forth by the Chief Executive in Impressive Speech—Immense Concourse Gathered to Witness Exercises in Connection with Laying of Corner Stone of Memorial Hall.

Hodgenville, Ky.—The corner stone of the splendid memorial to be erected to the memory of Abraham Lincoln was laid by President Roosevelt. The exercises were participated in by many of the nation's leading men, Cardinal Gibbons and ex-Gov. Folk of Missouri being among those who made addresses.

From all points, by train and over roads not particularly smooth at this season of the year, the people gathered to the exercises. A building four times the size of the tent provided could not have accommodated the crowd.

The corner stone of the Memorial hall was laid by President Roosevelt. In an impressive address the chief executive eulogized the life and work of the great statesman. He spoke as follows:



"We have met here to celebrate the one hundredth anniversary of the birth of one of the two greatest Americans; of one of the two or three greatest men of the nineteenth century; of one of the greatest men in the world's history. This rail splitter, this boy who passed his ungainly youth in the dire poverty of the poorest of the frontier folk, whose rise was by weary and painful labor, lived to lead his people through the burning flames of a struggle from which the nation emerged, purified as by fire, born anew to a loftier life. After long years of iron effort, and of failure that came more often than victory, he at last rose to the leadership of the republic at the moment when that leadership had become as great and other men as good; but in all the history of mankind there are no other two great men as good as these, no other two good men as great. Widely though the problems of to-day differ from the problems set for solution to Washington when he founded this nation, to Lincoln when he saved it and freed the slave, yet the qualities they showed in meeting these problems are exactly the same as those we should show in doing our work to-day.

Lincoln's Deep Foresight.

"Lincoln saw into the future with the prophetic imagination usually vouchsafed only to the poet and the seer. He had in him all the lift toward greatness of the visionary, without any of the visionary's fanaticism or egotism, without any of the visionary's narrow jealousy of the practical man and inability to strive in practical fashion for the realization of an ideal. He had the practical man's hard common sense and willingness to adapt means to ends; but there was in him none of that morbid growth of mind and soul which blinds so many practical men to the higher things of life. No more practical man ever lived than this homely backwoods idealist; but he had nothing in common with those practical men whose consciences are warped until they fail to distinguish between good and evil, fail to understand that strength, ability, shrewdness, whether in the world of business or of politics, only serve to make their possessor a more noxious, a more evil member of the community, if they are not guided and controlled by a fine and high moral sense.

Lessons from Lincoln's Life.

"We of this day must try to solve many social and industrial problems, requiring to an especial degree the combination of indomitable resolution with cool-headed sanity. We can profit by the way in which Lincoln used both these traits as he strove for reform. We can learn much of value from the very attacks which following that course brought upon his head, attacks alike by the extremists of revolution and by the extremists of reaction. He never wavered in devotion to his principles, in his love for the union, and in his abhorrence of slavery. Timid and lukewarm people were always denouncing him because he was extreme; but as a matter of fact he never went to extremes, he worked step by step, and because of this the extremists hated and denounced him with a fervor which now seems to us fantastic in its deification of the unreal and the impossible. At the very time when one side was holding him up as the apostle of social revolution because he was against slavery, the leading abolitionist denounced him as the 'slave hound of Illinois.' When he was the second time candidate for president, the majority of his opponents attacked him because of what they termed his extreme radicalism, while a minority threatened to bolt his nomination because he was not radical enough. He had continually to check those who wished to go forward too fast, at the very time that he overrode the opposition of those who wished not to go forward at all. The goal was never dim before his vision; but he picked his way cautiously, without either halt or hurry, as he strode toward it, through such a morass of difficulty that no man the stupendous world-task of the time. He grew to know greatness, but never ease. Success came to him, but never happiness, save that which springs from doing well a painful and a vital task. Power was his, but not pleasure. The furrowed deepened on his brow, but his eyes were undimmed by either hate or fear. His gaunt shoulders were bowed, but his steel thews never faltered as he bore for a burden the destinies of his people. His great and tender heart shrank from giving pain; and the task allotted him was to pour out like water the life-blood of the young men, and to feel in his every fiber the sorrow of the women. Disaster saddened but never dismayed him. As the red years of war went by they found him ever doing his duty in the present, even facing the future with fearless front, high of heart, and dauntless of soul. Unbroken by hatred, unshaken by scorn, he worked and suffered for the people. Triumph was his at the last; and barely had he tasted it before murder found him, and the kindly, patient, fearless eyes were closed forever.

Washington and Lincoln.

"As a people we are indeed beyond measure fortunate in the characters of the two greatest of our public men, Washington and Lincoln. Widely though they differed in externals, the Virginia landed gentleman and the Kentucky backwoodsman, they were alike in essentials; they were alike in the great qualities which rendered each able to render service to his nation and to all mankind such as no other man of his generation could or did render. Each had lofty ideals, but each in striving to attain these lofty ideals was guided by the soundest common sense. Each possessed indomitable courage in adversity, and a soul wholly unspoiled by prosperity. Each possessed all the gentler virtues commonly exhibited by good men who lack great strength of character. Each possessed also all the strong qualities commonly exhibited by those towering masters of mankind who have too often shown themselves devoid of so much as the understanding of the words by which we signify the qualities of duty, of mercy, of devotion to the right, of lofty disinterestedness in battling for the good of others. There have been other men of less courage would have attempted it, while it would surely have overwhelmed any man of judgment less serene.

Man of Great Toleration.

"Yet, perhaps the most wonderful thing of all, and, from the standpoint of the American of to-day and of the future, the most vitally important, was the extraordinary way in which Lincoln could fight valiantly against what he deemed wrong, and yet preserve undiminished his love and respect for the brother from whom he differed.

Strong Sense of Justice.

"He lived in days that were great and terrible, when brother fought against brother for what each sincerely deemed to be the right. In a contest so grim the strong men who alone can carry it through are rarely able to do justice to the deep convictions of those with whom they grapple in mortal strife. At such times men see through a glass darkly; to only the rarest and loftiest spirits is vouchsafed that clear vision which gradually comes to all, even to the lesser, as the struggle fades into distance, and wounds are forgotten, and peace creeps back to the hearts that were hurt. But Lincoln was given this supreme vision. He did not hate the man from whom he differed. Weakness was as foreign as wickedness to his strong, gentle nature; but his courage was of a quality so high that it needed no bolstering of dark passion. He saw clearly that the same high qualities, the same courage, and willingness for self-sacrifice, and devotion to the right as it was given them to see the right, belonged both to the men of the north and to the men of the south. As the years roll by, and as all of us, wherever we dwell grow to feel an equal pride in the valor and self-devotion, alike of the men who wore the blue and the men who wore the gray, so this whole nation will grow to feel a peculiar sense of pride in the mightiest of the mighty men who mastered the mighty days; the lover of his country and of all mankind; the man whose blood was shed for the union of his people, and for the freedom of a race, Abraham Lincoln."

It doesn't take a wonderful mind to scheme, but it does take one to keep from it.

TRAFFIC ON RAIL AND WIRE TIED UP

Chicago the Center of One of the Fiercest Storms of the Present Winter.

Chicago, Feb. 15.—What appeared to be an ordinary winter storm of small proportions Sunday developed into one of the most troublesome and disagreeable periods in the history of the Lake Michigan region.

Telegraph and telephone communication between Chicago and the outside world was interrupted seriously by the heavy snow and sleet which covered the ground and made transportation next to impossible.

Northern Illinois, Northern Indiana, Northern Ohio, Missouri, Kansas, Iowa and Southern Wisconsin were cut off from communication with the outside world early in the night.

Direct communication between Chicago and Indianapolis and St. Louis was cut off, but late Sunday the telegraph companies re-established connection with those cities by the way of New York.

The snow and sleet hung so heavily to the wires that in many cases they were pulled to the ground and telegraph poles were broken off as a result of the heavily-coated wires and the strong wind.

Officials of the lake steamship companies reported they had experienced considerable difficulty during the storm. The Goodrich company, which operates the steamships Racine, Iowa, Indiana and Georgia on Lake Michigan, reported that the vessels named reached their respective designations, but were behind time.

The steamer Kansas of the Barry line is reported to have had the hardest experience of the day. The vessel left Milwaukee at 7 o'clock Saturday night and arrived at Chicago shortly after 6 o'clock Sunday morning.

Cleveland, O., Feb. 15.—One of the most severe sleet storms experienced in several years Sunday paralyzed the telegraph, telephone and trolley wires and seriously interfered with railway traffic throughout Northern Ohio. Trees were loaded down with ice and hundreds of telegraph and telephone poles are down. Communication by wire with many towns in the northwestern part of the state is completely shut off. At Sandusky the trolley wires were down and the city was without street and interurban car service.

St. Louis, Mo., Feb. 15.—Delayed and interrupted telegraph dispatches received here Sunday night tell of heavy sleet storm north and west of St. Louis. The storm first started with a rain and was followed by sleet, which carried many telegraph wires and poles to the ground.

At Keokuk, Ia., a hurricane blew down the towers on the bridge across the Mississippi river, and all wires eastward were broken. The same condition prevails at Fort Madison, Ia.

Kansas City, Feb. 15.—Zero weather and a nasty sleet and snowstorm prevailed in the southwest Sunday night. All over Kansas the fall of sleet was heavy, causing delay to traffic and wire communication. In Oklahoma the storm began Saturday night with a rain, followed by a sudden drop of 18 degrees in temperature.

HOTEL CLARENDON BURNED.

Guests Were Saved Without Injury—Loss $200,000.

Daytona, Fla., Feb. 15.—The Hotel Clarendon at Sea Breeze, one of the largest resort hotels on the East coast, together with 10 cottages adjoining the house, was totally destroyed by fire early Sunday.

Two hundred and fifteen guests who were asleep at the time were saved without injury, and many were able to gather up most of their belongings.

When the blaze was first discovered the night clerk rushed the help to each room, notifying guests, who made their way hurriedly to the streets.

At one time the blaze appeared to be under control, but the wind shifted and it broke anew. In less than three-quarters of an hour the entire building was burned.

The 10 cottages owned by H. H. Gochersperger caught from sparks and all were burning at the same time.

The hotel help was panic-stricken and the clerks could do nothing with them, one woman biting a clerk on the hand.

The hotel was a wooden structure, valued at $200,000, and was insured for about 40 per cent.

Dry Niagara Results From High Wind.

Niagara Falls, N. Y., Feb. 15.—Not since March 29, 1848, have the falls of Niagara presented such a spectacle as they do Sunday. A high wind drove the water back up Lake Erie and ice gathered on the reefs between Goat Island and the New York mainland, rendering the American channel and American falls practically dry, despite a fierce storm from the east.

Upset Vicksburg.

Vicksburg, Miss, Feb. 15.—The most severe storm of wind and rain experienced here in years prevailed Sunday afternoon, causing property loss estimated at $10,000. The office of the Vicksburg Herald was unroofed and a number of houses sustained damage.

Five Firemen Injured.

New York, Feb. 15.—Five firemen were injured, two fatally, in a spectacular fire which destroyed the packing sheds of the Pratt oil works—a subsidiary of the Standard Oil Co. The loss is $50,000.

BIG OPPORTUNITIES

FOR THE YOUNG MAN AND YOUNG WOMAN OF TODAY

TELEGRAPHY
SHORTHAND

Offer Brilliant Possibilities for Advancement and High Salaries

Hundreds of thousands of bright young men and young women are today arriving at that age when they become interested in their future—in their prospects for a successful career, with the ability on their parts to earn good salaries, be independent, and amount to something in the world, and for these young persons there are many professions and semi-professional occupations which offer golden avenues to important and high-salaried positions. Among these professions are Telegraphy, Bookkeeping, Shorthand, etc.

Take, for instance, the telegrapher—probably every president of a great railroad, today, secured his start as a telegrapher—working his way up by careful attention to his duties, and by grasping his opportunities and making the most of them. Then take the profession of book-keeping—nearly every head of a great mercantile or financial institution of today began life either in that institution, or in some other, as a book-keeper. And what is true of the profession of book-keeping is equally true of that of stenography.

What these other young men and young women have done, any young man or young woman can do—if they will. All that is necessary is a few dollars invested in a correspondence course, in one or the other of these studies—the devoting of a few spare moments now and then (which would otherwise be wasted) to the study selected—and a determination to learn, and to succeed.

Among those educational institutions which today instruct young men and young women (as well as persons of as ages) by correspondence, in the person's own home, one of the most prominent and best known is the Michigan Business Institute, at Kalamazoo, Michigan, which has, during the past twelve or fifteen years, graduated many hundreds of young men and young women, in each of the lines of professional work above referred to.

This famous Educational Institution of Michigan is at all times glad to answer inquiries from young men and young women (or others) who feel that they would like to take up any one of these studies, in their own homes, at small expense—and a letter addressed to E. F. Sumption, President, Michigan Business Institute, 745 Inst. Bldg., Kalamazoo, Mich., will receive prompt and courteous attention.

It may be well to add, also, that in taking up a Course of Study with this Institution, the student is not required to pay anything at all for the tuition until he or she has graduated and has secured a satisfactory position, on salary. This arrangement is so generous a one that no person desiring to perfect themselves in a good-paying profession can afford to neglect taking advantage of it.

Unknown to Science.

The eight-year-old son of a scientist showed a sudden interest in photography.

"Yes, my son."

"Then how is it they can't photograph a boy without putting his head in an iron frame?"

Can Christians Unite?

The question was asked me by a young lady, who had heard a sermon on this important religious issue. She said she felt sure that I could give her a satisfactory answer, and that is why she asked it. So she comes to me a freethinker, and ask me a very important question I am going to forget the wise old thinkers who read the RECORDER and who can answer the question as well as I can. When ladies begin to ask questions about religion they can make you turn a theological somersault quicker than you can say skat.

There seems little prospect, however, at this time, to unify the opposing christian sects, which we see in the doctrine of faith, a loss of prestige and personal influence. The tendency of the time is not toward unifying the church sects, but toward a greater and a more sharply defined division. The Catholic will not unite with the Protestant sects, Protestantism is cut up in myriads of waring sects, and it would be impossible to formulate a creed that all would accept and unite upon. Instead of dogmatic controversy dying away, it is becoming more general.

If this young lady will stop a moment to think, she will observe that nature in producing an infinite diversity of minds, made it impossible that they should unite on any one kind of religion, or belief. If she will set her thinker to working she will not have to go very far to see the difference that exists in religious bodies, even those which accept Christ, divide, dispute and hate each other, is that christian unity? Meanwhile the majority of mankind remain away from and outside of the Church, and these seek the truth in science rather than in revelation. If my young lady friend is acquainted with ancient history she certainly knows that the Catholic was the first Christian religion, and they will be the last Christian religion, there will be only the two—the Catholic and the non-Catholic or freethinkers. It is evident that Christianity is now passing through the same intellectual conflict that marked the paganism of Greece and Rome. Why the drift at the present time of intellectual, learned and scientific people away from Christ? Why is it Christians have to work and strive so hard to get people to accept Christ? Why is it there is no one idea of God upon which Christians agree? No one idea of Jesus upon which they agree? No one idea of the hereafter upon which they agree? and no one mode of baptism that christians can agree upon. Christians cannot agree among themselves as to what constitutes Christianity. If this young lady will witness the never-ending changes going on with all things and with all opinions, she will see why they can't unite. The heresy of one age becomes the gospel of the next. Take the religion of Thomas Paine, who was then as President Taft is now, a Unitarian. In his Age of Reason, Paine declared, "I believe in one God and no more, and I hope for happiness beyond this life, and to do good is my religion." The above quotations clearly prove that his religious views are the same that President Taft now entertains. The heresy of fifty years ago is the gospel of today. If this Christian lady keeps on asking questions she will be a freethinker before long, for that is the way freethinkers are made. Meanwhile the liberal, the freethinker, the scientist and all progressive people, stand in utter amazement as they behold antiquity in passing show.

They with the husband, have great reason to lament her death. No other one can fill her place in their confidence and love. Though the weather and roads were very bad the church was filled with relatives and friends. The burial services were conducted by her pastor, J. H. Walterick, Tuesday Feb. 16th, at 11:30 a. m. IN MEMORY.

Died, February 11th, 1909, Goldie C. Davis, daughter of John and Lou Davis, aged 21 months, 3 weeks and 3 days. We feel much grieved over the death of our loved one, but trust to God that giveth and God that taketh away. She has left a vacant place in our home that never can be filled, but we are comforted by the Spirit of God. She passed quietly from this world of sin to that Heavenly Kingdom to dwell with God and His angels. Darling we have all felt that we have nothing to live for, but His sorrow has brought us nearer to God, and we hope to meet our sweet little sister in the home of Glory.

Death has robbed us of our sister, whom we loved and cherished dear. It was Goldie, yes, dear Goldie. Can we help but shed a tear? Sleep on, dear sister, take thy rest. God called the home—He thought it best. How hard it is to part from one so shortly given. whose smiles have won our weary hearts, prepared for only Heaven.

HER SISTERS.

CARD OF THANKS—We desire to express our sincere thanks to our relatives, friends and neighbors, for their many acts of kindness and sympathy extended toward us in our bereavement in the loss of our beloved daughter and sister, Goldie C. Davis. Especially do we thank Bro. Stith for his kind and consoling words, and Mr. Blanton for the efficient manner in which he conducted the funeral.

WELL PLEASED WITH WESTERN CANADA.

GOOD CROPS, SPLENDID CLIMATE AND WELL ENFORCED LAWS.

Mr. George E. Hunter is a Maidstone, Saskatchewan (Central Canada), farmer, who writes to a Canadian Government Agent as follows:

"It was the first week in November, 1907, when we arrived here. There was very little snow or cold weather until after the holidays, then the snow and cold increased, but to no great extent. I think the coldest I heard of was 30 degrees below zero, but that degree of cold would not be felt here any more than 10 degrees below zero would be back home in Michigan, owing to the beautiful dry atmosphere of this country. There came a good thaw every month that settled the snow, the fields soon became bare, and on the 12th of April I commenced ploughing. The snow was then all gone and summer at hand. This last season was something more than an average year around here, with fine crops gathered from a large acreage. In parts the crops were less than average, but generally speaking they were above it. The price of wheat was quite good. Some fine yields sold at $1.10 per bushel, while some were marketed at much less, but hardly any went below about 60 cents a bushel.

"Oats started on the market at 35 cents a bushel, barley about 50 cents, and flax from 90 cents to $1.00 a bushel.

"As this was my first year in this country, it was a hard year for my horses, owing to their being eastern horses, and not used to the western climate, but they will soon get climatized.

"The soil on my farm is a black loam, about one foot in thickness, below that we find about six feet of clay, and below that again gravel and sand, with an abundance of excellent water. This was the condition of the ground as I found it when I dug a well. I can say that the water is as sweet and as free from alkali and impurities as I ever saw.

"My opinion is that the man who comes here with a little means can do no better than invest $500 or $1,000 in cattle, after locating a homestead adjoining or near some hilly part of the country where it will not be taken up as soon. There is plenty of grass and hay to be found in the hilly country and small lakes and sloughs will afford sufficient water for any amount of cattle. The bluffs with a few hay or straw sheds will make sufficient shelter for them. There is no need to worry about the market for cattle, as there is already a great call for stock of all kinds to satisfy the continued demands of the large packing house at Edmonton, established by Swift and Company.

"The dairy business should by no means be forgotten. It is one of the paying enterprises of this great west. The price of butter seldom goes below 25 cents and reaches as high as 40 cents a pound. Also the new creameries that are fast being erected along the lines of railroad are calling on the farmers for their cream.

"These creameries are greatly welcomed in all communities, because selling cream is better than making butter, even at an average price of 25 cents a pound. For a new country the railroad transportation facilities are good; not yet, of course, what they are in older countries, but the new lines are swiftly gaining as the country gets more settled and supplies them with produce to ship. It is hard to say too much in favor of this country. All one needs is a little money with grit and ambition. I have seen homesteade that were filed on a little over three years ago that the owners have refused $3,000 for.

"There is much more that can be said in favor of Western Canada, but I think my letter has been long enough."

Architectural Note.

Judge Balcom was talking to a crowd on the street a few days ago, telling them the proper way to put shingles on a house. He said: "The old rule was to allow six inches of the shingle to 'show to the weather,' but that is too much. You should allow not more than four inches to show." Some wag remarked in a matter-of-fact tone to the judge: "How would it do not to let any show?" The judge replied, "I've seen roofs made that way; but it takes a great many shingles." Then the judge wanted to get mad when the crowd laughed.—Twiggs County (Ga.) Citizen.

DUTY'S CALL

Ezra the Scribe Finds a Mission at Babylon.

BY THE "HIGHWAY AND BYWAY" PREACHER

Scripture Authority—Book of Ezra.

Ezra, Scribe and Priest.—Ezra was the son of Seraiah, and was probably born at Babylon. He was a famous scribe and priest, descended from Hilkiah, the high priest in Josiah's reign. Seraiah, Ezra's father, is quite a different person from Seraiah the high priest mentioned in Ezra 7:1. All that is really known of Ezra is contained in the last four chapters of the Book of Ezra and in the Book of Nehemiah, chapter 8 and 12:26. From these passages we learn that he was a learned and pious priest residing at Babylon in the time of Artaxerxes Longimanus. The origin of his influence with the king does not appear, but in the seventh year of his reign, in spite of the unfavorable report which had been sent by Rehum and Shimshai, he obtained leave to go to Jerusalem, and to take with him a company of Israelites, together with priests, Levites, singers, porters, and Nethinim. The journey of Ezra and his companions from Babylon to Jerusalem took just four months; and they brought up with them a large free-will offering of gold and silver, and silver vessels.

SERMONETTE.

Our first introduction to Ezra is in his own account of how he prepared and executed plans for a journey to Jerusalem some 70 years after the first return of the captive Hebrews to rebuild the city and temple under the decree of Cyrus. It was during those 70 years that Ezra was born in Babylon and grew up there. Just how old he was when he carried out his plans for leading an expedition to Jerusalem is not known, but probably he was somewhere between 30 and 50 years old, perhaps nearer the latter than the former. We know nothing concerning his childhood or how he came into the service of the king. We do know, however, that he had won the favor of the latter and stood very high in his councils. Then, knowing the character of Ezra, as revealed by the narrative of his remarkable journey and his services to the Jews at Jerusalem, we are able to read between the lines and form a pretty accurate opinion as to what his childhood training and his young manhood had been.

It is here that we want to point a great and important truth. Ezra was the man he was because the foundations of his character had been well laid in his youth.

Mark that point well.

You won't find gold in the earth except in the places where it was put when the old world was young and in the making.

If there is a vein of gold in a man which circumstances brings to the surface in his mature years, you may be certain that it is the best kind of evidence that in the early years it was put there by the wise training he received.

The stamp of a God-fearing mother was upon him and the strength and firmness of a wise and faithful father are there.

If it had not been so what could have kept him true to his God when surrounded by the corrupting and unholy influences of the voluptuous Persian court?

If it had not been so, where did he get that strength of character by which he was able to carry through that great moral reform and save the Jewish people from contamination, if not extinction, by unlawful intermarriage with the heathen people about?

THE STORY.

ARTAXERXES, king of Persia, was not happy or contented. His kingdom was great, and he had all the power and pleasure that heart could wish, but in it all there seemed to be something lacking. There was an unrest at his heart and a dissatisfaction after the business of the enjoyment of the moment was over. There was an unreality about it all. He was conscious of the superficial atmosphere in which he lived—of the flattery and subserviency of his counsellors and attendants, even to the priests who ministered in temple and who strove to center the worship of the gods about the king and make him feel that he himself was a deity. But in it all he felt the element of insincerity. He could not tell why, but he did.

One day while in such a frame of mind his chief counsellor had come to him with a request from a young Hebrew of the realm that he be given permission to return to Jerusalem.

"What can lead a young Hebrew to want to make such a long and perilous journey as that?" he asked himself, with sudden interest, and more as a passing whim he ordered the young man brought into his presence.

"No," exclaimed the king, after he had listened to the young man's story, "you cannot go," and he watched to see what effect his words would produce. There was no reason why he should not grant the request, but in a spirit of willful obstinacy he decided he would not.

For an instant the king thought he detected a shadow of disappointment on the young man's face, but when he spoke it was with a voice clear and firm.

"Then I can serve my God here," he said.

"Was that what you were going to Jerusalem to do?" asked the king.

"It was," said the young man.

"Well, thou shalt indeed stay in Babylon, and thou shalt serve me here in the palace," and waving his hand as a sign that the interview was at an end and there was nothing more to be said, the chief counsellor led the young man out of the audience chamber and had soon assigned him quarters in the palace, telling him at the same time that he could not leave the palace save by special permission of the king.

And the chief counsellor left him, the former to ponder over the new whim of the king, and the young man to think over the strange happenings of the past few hours.

When the words of the king had fallen on his ear and he had replied that he would serve his God there, he had not realized all that those words had cost him, but as he sat there alone, virtually a prisoner in the palace with uncertainty as to what would next befall him, he almost felt like upbraiding himself for having had the ambition to go to Jerusalem. Then, ashamed of himself for the thought, he exclaimed:

"No, it was a worthy impulse, and I was acting from the highest sense of duty. If such lead into difficulty then I shall not bemoan my fate, for, indeed, I can serve the God of Israel as I had intended to serve him at Jerusalem."

Ezra, for this was the young man's name, from his earliest childhood as he sat at his mother's knee, had eagerly listened to the stories of his people, and of their return under the decree of Cyrus to Jerusalem to rebuild the city and the temple, and as he had listened he had thought in his childish heart of the day when he, too, would go back. Was not he of the priestly line? And was not he some day to take his place in the temple worship? He would go back and serve his God. And so he had grown up with this thought ever before him, and when the time, as he thought, had arrived, he made bold to seek to obtain the consent of the king.

The results of this move on Ezra's part we have already seen. It was a bitter disappointment. It seemed like a blasting of all his hopes and plans.

"How can I serve God in this heathen court?" he exclaimed. "There is nothing I can do here."

Thus, under such trying conditions and discouragements did Ezra begin his service in the palace. The king was interested in the young man as he had not been in any one before. He often sent for him and talked with him, because in him he found something which was lacking even in the most profound and learned of his wise men.

So it was that without realizing it, Ezra really began a great mission there in the palace. The king was tired of the Persian stories, and so he listened with growing interest to the accounts of the Hebrew people and the dealings of their God with them.

"You say that the Hebrew God is one God, and the only God?" demanded the king one day. "Suppose I should tell you it was not so, and that the gods of the Persians were as great as you claim your God is?"

"Seeing that the king asks a direct question," replied Ezra, with a deferential bow, "I can make but one answer, and that is that it would make no difference what the king said, for the Jehovah of the Hebrew is the one God of the heavens and the earth."

Never before had the king had one bold enough to strive to maintain his point in his presence, and he shot a searching, half-indignant glance at the young man. But the latter did not quail before his look, and the king said:

"How do you know this?"

"Because of the record of God's dealings with his people," Ezra replied, confidently.

From that day forward the king became an absorbed student of the history of God's dealings with the Hebrew people, and one day startled Ezra with the announcement that he (Ezra) was to return to Jerusalem.

"Me!" exclaimed Ezra. "Art thou jesting?"

"Nay, that I am not. See this." And he handed to Ezra a copy of a letter he had prepared.

"And the king gives me treasure and people to go with me," Ezra exclaimed. "It is well that the king withheld his consent at first."

Then Face to Face.

The true follower and friend of the Master is not devoted to him simply as to a beautiful memory. He sustains a most intimate relation to a living person. He, the living Jesus, is now thinking of his friends, guiding them, opening the ways for them, revealing his will to them, giving them assurances of his love. Many a time in the pages of the gospel, in prayer, in the fulfillment of some taxing duty for his sake, we seem to catch intimations of his presence; and then some day there will be a swift transition from the stony streets of our earthly cities to the golden pavements of the New Jerusalem; from the dwellings of wood and stone in which we live, to the Father's house; from seeing him through a glass darkly to beholding him face to face.

If you will be governed by reason, and be true to the best n yourself, standing boldly to the truth, you will be happy.—Marcus Aurelius.

Hope, deceitful as it is, serves at least to lead us to the end of life along an agreeable road.—La Rochefoucauld.

MAKE YOUR OWN TRAIL.

Exercise Individuality; Do Not Be Content to Follow.

At this time of year almost everybody is busy with plans for coming half-holidays, whole holidays and vacations. Before making any decision involving the spending of days off for months, and probably years, to come, it is well to make sure what the probable influence will be upon your character, what it will do to bring out your individuality and broaden your philosophy of life. It must be remembered that recreation, properly taken, is in no sense a mere amusement or means to pleasantly passing away idle time, but on the contrary will exert a very considerable influence upon your success in life, both in your business and in your home. Everything else being somewhere near equal, that form of recreation offering the best outlet for your individuality, which may be bottled up tight during your working hours, should be the right one to choose. Go into something where you have a chance for achievement, where you can get a clear perspective of life and "feel that the census of the universe would be incomplete without counting you." And go into it seriously, with the determination to act your part your way. You need follow no path, but may branch off anywhere and blaze a trail of your own. Certainly you will regret it if you become the tail to somebody else's kite. And most surely you will profit by experience. If you have never yet felt the thrill of initiative, never stood up on your own heels and faced the world from your own particular point of view, now is your chance, this year. Unleash your discontent, join hands with Hope and take the road which seems the hardest. You will not be long in learning the science of going light, for the harder the trail the quicker one learns. And in learning you will come into possession of the true spirit of recreation, which is but another phase of the sadly neglected gospel of sport for sport's sake. —Recreation.

Bumblepuppy Prophecy.

At the first sign of dawn one day recently a party of women clad in white gathered in Nyack, N. Y., to wait for the end of the world. Mr. J. Lee Spangler had told them they would have no further use for their sheath gowns after that day. They believed the prophet; and went up to the cemetery, indeed, so as to be near the main exit.

Spangler didn't come. He left Nyack the day before, and only the tender memories of him remain.

And when night came, and the women found themselves back in their homes, frying themselves pancakes, gossiping and keeping baby's bottle filled (just as will be done for several years yet, in all probability), two things must have occurred to them: that God doesn't employ a press agent; and that Barnum did.—Van Norden's Magazine.

Bull Created Havoc in Street.

The other day while a bull was being driven through the streets of Dublin it suddenly ran amuck, and after knocking down the man in charge made a dash at a cyclist. The latter dismounted and sought refuge in a doorway, but the bull took revenge by attacking his bicycle, which in his flight the rider had left in the road. The animal then ran to the canal side, where it fell into the water and was rescued in an exhausted condition.

Why They Don't Clap.

"Have you seen the near perfect woman, Maud Odell?" she asked. "No. You ought to see her. And if you want to be really amused, you ought to go and watch the men gazing at her wide-eyed, the men with their wives. They are taking in all her perfect points, but they are afraid to applaud her on account of their wives. That beautiful, near perfect woman leaves the stage nearly every time without a handclap on account of the wives."

Invention of Porcelain.

At a display of porcelain in China an exhibitor said that Chinese literature ascribes the invention of porcelain to a period some 25 centures before Christ. Foreign experts are by no means certain that the art existed before the seventh century of this era.

Facts for Sick Women

We know of no other medicine which has been so successful in relieving the suffering of women, or secured so many genuine testimonials, as has Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

In almost every community you will find women who have been restored to health by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. Almost every woman you meet has either been benefited by it, or knows some one who has.

In the Pinkham Laboratory at Lynn, Mass., are files containing over one million one hundred thousand letters from women seeking health, in which many openly state over their own signatures that they have regained their health by taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound is made exclusively from roots and herbs, and is perfectly harmless.

The reason why it is so successful is because it contains ingredients which act directly upon the female organism, restoring it to healthy and normal activity.

Thousands of unsolicited and genuine testimonials such as the following prove the efficiency of this simple remedy.

Minneapolis, Minn.:—"I was a great sufferer from female troubles which caused a weakness and broken down condition of the system. I read so much of what Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound had done for other suffering women, I felt sure it would help me, and I must say it did help me wonderfully. Within three months I was a perfectly well woman.

"I want this letter made public to show the benefits to be derived from Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound."—Mrs. John G. Moldan, 2115 Second St. North, Minneapolis, Minn.

Women who are suffering from those distressing ills peculiar to their sex should not lose sight of these facts or doubt the ability of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound to restore their health.

ROUND ABOUT THE STATE

What Is Going on in Different Sections of Kentucky.

CAPITAL NOTES.

Depot Attached.

The depot and tracks of the L. & N. Railroad Co. in this city, between Ann and High streets on Broadway, were levied on by Sheriff Hieatt to satisfy a judgment of $6,000 in favor of Justice Crutcher. Sheriff Hieatt says that unless the company takes a supersedeas proceeding or pays the judgment he will at once go down to the depot, take possession of it, sell the tickets and run the trains until the judgment is satisfied. The depot is used by the C. & O. Railroad Co., the Kentucky Highlands railroad, the Frankfort & Cincinnati railroad and the L. & N. railroad, belonging to the latter company.

Newspaper Men Dined by Governor.

Gov. and Mrs. Willson entertained the newspaper men and correspondents for newspapers with a dinner at the mansion. Those present were Miss Warren, a niece of the governor; W. P. Walton, editor of the Kentucky State Journal; A. R. Dunlap, of the Frankfort News and Courier-Journal; W. H. Bidwell, of the Louisville Herald; Dulin Moss, of the Enquirer; S. M. Saufley, of the Frankfort News and Louisville Times; James L. Newman, of the State Journal and Louisville Post; Adjt. Gen. Johnston, Assistant Attorney Gen... Lockett and Private Secretary McKinzie Todd.

Awarded $5,000 by Court of Appeals.

The appellate court awarded J. L. Bruce, of Danville, judgment for $5,000 for his services as administrator of the estate of the late Samuel Harding. The estate was valued at about $75,000, and there were a number of heirs and considerable litigation.

Franklin County Investigation.

Examination of the financial condition of Franklin county was ordered by the fiscal court. It appointed a committee of five citizens of this city and county to employ an expert accountant to examine the books and report thereon.

Judge O'Rear Gives Opinion.

Reversing the judgment of the Leslie county circuit court in the case of the commonwealth vs. A. Gatliff, the court of appeals, in an opinion written by Judge O'Rear, holds that an exact description of property must be given when it is listed for taxation.

Forced To Suspend Payments.

State Treasurer E. Farley will be forced to suspend payments on general warrants because of the lack of funds in the treasury. The state, after paying $385,000 to the county school teachers and $70,000 to the company which built the new capitol, will have a balance of but $41,500.

Probe Invited By Prison Commission.

Anticipating the action of Gov. Willson in calling for a complete examination of the penitentiaries and reform school of this state, the board of prison commission asked for a thorough examination of the institutions.

Insurance License Revoked.

Insurance Commissioner Bell received a telegram from the insurance commissioner of Pennsylvania stating that the Guardian Fire Insurance Co. of Pittsburg had gone into the hands of a receiver. Bell at once revoked the license of the company.

Circuit Court Decision Reversed.

The appellate court handed down three opinions reversing the judgments of the Campbell circuit court in which Benero and George Ehrlich were fined $500 each in each case for conducting a poolroom. A new trial is ordered on the ground that the lower court erred.

Guards Will Soon Be Recalled.

Adjt. Gen. Johnston reports that there are now but 10 men on duty in the night-rider districts. Indications are that they will soon be called home, and that the militia will be out of the field for the first time since Gov. Willson went into office.

Governor Extends Thanks.

In a proclamation Gov. Willson extended the thanks of Kentuckians to those who originated and fostered the Lincoln memorial idea and to President Roosevelt and other distinguished men who contributed to making the centenary celebration a success.

Campbell Circuit Court Reversed.

Margaret Was Logical.

One afternoon I overheard my two children talking about the Sunday school lesson.

Dick, who was much smaller than Margaret, believed all she said about it. So he asked her what God looked like, and she quickly answered: "God looks like a stalk of corn, because mamma said he had ears on all sides, and a stalk of corn is the only thing I know that has ears on all sides."—Delineator.

A Substitute for Work.

"Physical culture, father, is perfectly lovely!" exclaimed an enthusiastic miss just home from college. "Look! To develop the arms I grasp this rod by one end and move it slowly from right to left."

"Well, well!" exclaimed the father; "what won't science discover! If that rod had straw at the other end of it you'd be sweeping."—Success Magazine.

C. W. Riley Dead.

C. W. Riley, of Bullittsville, passed away last Sunday afternoon, after surviving a second stroke of paralysis only a few hours. Mr. Riley had been feeble for some time, but suffered his first stroke of paralysis nearly a year ago, from the effects of which he appeared to have recovered materially in the last few months. Mr. Riley was one of the county's best and most substantial citizens, and had a loving and devoted wife, while they were surrounded by a family of five dutiful intelligent children, of which Rev. Edgar Riley is the oldest, and with whose tears of sorrow are mingled those of a very large circle of sympathizing friends. C. W. Riley was born December 3d, 1818; married Miss Corinne Balsly November 16, 1852, united with Bullittsville Christian church, of which he was an elder, in 1902, and died February 21, 1909. He had been a Mason ever since he was 21 years of age. The funeral discourse was preached in Bullittsville Christian church yesterday at 10 a. m. by Rev. Hagan, pastor of Covington Fourth Street Christian church. The remains were placed in the vault at Bullittsburg Baptist church to await interment. The pall-bearers were Edgar Cropper, Geo. McGinson, W. D. Cropper, O. W. Gaines, W. P. Cropper and W. L. Riddell, members of Burlington Masonic Lodge, of which Mr. Riley was a member. The funeral was in charge of Scott Chambers, of Walton.

LeHandy, merchant at Defries, Hart county, who purchased the pelt of the black fox caught by John Lobb, a boy near Sulphur Well, made the trade of his life in buying the pelt. He paid the boy $1.50 for the hide, and the boy was well pleased. Handy then wrote to Louisville fur dealers and was surprised to get an offer of $200 for the pelt. He decided they were "kidding" him but was greater surprised a few days later to get an offer for $600. He then took up the matter with New York dealers, and learned that they were quoted at from $600 to $1,500. As the one caught was extra fine, it is only reasonable to suppose that he will receive the top price for it, and it now looks as if Handy will make $1,490.40 to his investment of $1.60.

This is the only black fox ever captured in this State, so far as is known, and with one exception the only one ever seen. An old negro living near Sulphur Well named Anderson Murray, claimed that he chased one two days and nights about thirty years ago, and as the one caught was so old it had no teeth, and in the same section, it is now supposed to have been the same, though at the time the old darkey claimed to have chased a black fox no one believed him. This will renew the trapping industry in this section.

The amount reported offered for this pelt sounds a little fishy, but there is no doubt but the black fox is very scarce, and their pelts sell very high. Five years ago a black fox made his home, so says Gov. J. R. Hindman, in the Gradyville country. He was often chased, but finally disappeared from the neighborhood.—Edmonton Correspondent to The Adair County News.

A suit setting up a unique claim for damages was filed in the circuit court at Georgetown by William H. Davis against the Georgetown Water Company for $20,000 damages on account of the death of the plaintiff's wife from typhoid fever at Georgetown. Plaintiff, as administrator of his deceased wife, alleges that the defendant company was obliged by contract to furnish pure and wholesome water, fit for domestic use, drinking, cooking etc., to deceased wife; that defendant company failed and refused to comply with the contract; that instead water, impure, unwholesome and full of typhoid bacilli was furnished; that deceased wife contracted typhoid and after a lingering and painful illness died of the disease. Plaintiff says that defendant at the time it furnished water to his sick wife knew of its impure condition.

has become essentially necessary in every sphere of business from the private individual to the capitalist. Every good farmer as a rule keeps an account with a bank, and it saves him many dollars, and gives him a better business standing with the public at large. No danger of money being destroyed by fire or lost by robbery when it is in a good bank. Your check given for an account is a positive receip, and a record of it is kept by the bank. The Equitable Bank and Trust Company, at Walton, Boone County, Ky., makes a study of all the public wants in the banking line, and transacts much of its business by mail. It pays interest on time deposits, and takes care of any sized account from a dollar up. Write us if you have anything in our line and we will interest you more than you can imagine.

Doubled His Space.

Geo. W. Hill & Co., of Covington, who have been regular advertisers in the RECORDER for many years, have contracted for double their usual space in these columns for this year, and Boone county people should keep an eye on their space.

Fun For the Boys.

The young men of the town have organized a muscle developing school. It holds its sessions every evening, and those who are taking a course at the school are performing some wonderful feats, gripping, kicking and lifting. It is a good thing for the boys if they do not overdo themselves.

A Rule for Twenty-five Years.

The RECORDER received, some time since, from its young friend, Clarence McCarty, of Belleview, a nice piece of fraternity poetry, but as the RECORDER does not handle contribution in verses, the poem has not been published. This rule has been in force in this office for more than 25 years.

Good Prices for Cows.

A Mr. Moore, of Lima, Ohio, was in this part of the county, last week, buying milk cows. He paid good prices and purchased several at $50 per head, among them one from J. F. Blyth, of Burlington, and one from J. W. Rouse, of Limaburg. There is a large number of good cows in this part of the county, and they are held at fancy prices.

Good for Goode.

Geo. C. Goode, of Covington, has tried the RECORDER as an advertising medium for years, and being thoroughly satisfied that an advertisement in its columns is a trade getter, he has begun a new year with an increase in his space. Mr. Goode knows how to get his business before the people of Boone county in the most effective manner.

EFFECTIVE RECIPE.

Home-Made Kidney, Bladder and Rheumatism Medicine for Readers.

Here is a simple home-made mixture as given by an eminent authority on Kidney diseases, who makes the statement that it will relieve almost any case of Kidney trouble if taken before the stage of Bright's disease. He states that such symptoms as lame back, pain in the side, frequent desire to urinate, especially at night; painful and discolored urination, are readily overcome. Here is the recipe. Try it:

These ingredients are all harmless and easily mixed at home by shaking well in a bottle. This mixture has a peculiar healing and soothing effect upon the entire Kidney and Urinary structure, and often overcomes the worst forms of Rheumatism in just a little while. This mixture is said to remove all blood disorders and cure Rheumatism by forcing the Kidneys to filter and strain from the blood and system all uric acid and foul, decomposed waste matter, which cause these all ctions. Try it if you aren't well. save the prescriptio .

INDIGESTION ENDS.

Misery from your Disordered Stomach goes in Five Minutes.

You can eat anything your stomach craves without fear of a case of Indigestion or Dyspepsia, or that your food will ferment or sour on your stomach if you will occasionally take a little Diapepsin after eating.

Your meals will taste good, and anything you eat will be digested; nothing can ferment or turn into acid or poison or stomach gas, which causes Belching, Dizziness, a feeling of fullness after eating, Nausea, Indigestion (like a lump of lead in stomach), Biliousness, Heartburn, Water brash, Pain in stomach and intestines or other symptoms.

Headaches from the Stomach are absolutely unknown where this effective remedy is used. Diapepsin really does all the work of a healthy stomach. It digests your meals when your stomach can't. Each triangule will digest all the food you can eat and leave nothing to ferment or sour.

Get a large 50-cent case of Pape's Diapepsin from your druggist and start taking today and by tomorrow you will actually brag about your healthy, strong Stomach, for you then can eat anything and everything you want without the slightest discomfort or misery, and every particle of impurity and Gas that is in your stomach and intestines is going to be carried away without the use of laxatives or any other assistance.

They are Enterprising Communities.

Walton and Verona neighborhoods constitute the section of Boone county which has made the most progress in the way of public improvements in the last few years. Good schools were established in the towns of Walton and Verona, and they proved to be an incentive to further improvement, and a demand for good roads resulted in a few years, and being backed by men imbued with a spirit of public enterprise there was no let up in the effort to secure them until they materialized, and now they boast of a system of good pikes which it is proposed to extend until it embraces every public road of any consequence in that part of the county. Walton and Verona precincts are coming to the front rapidly, and at the present rate of progress it will be but a few years before they will out class anyother section of the county. Pluck, money and enterprise will put a community in the lead.

A Couple of Moves.

Elbert Jones, who has lived for some time on the farm of Thomas Rouse, half a mile east of Burlington, moved, last Wednesday, to the farm occupied by Joe Eubanks, near Crescent Springs, Kenton county, and will work in Mr. Eubank's large dairy. Jacob Craig, who had worked for Mr. Eubanks for some time moved on Thursday to Burlington, and occupies J. F. Blyth's residence across the street from the Boone House. He will cultivate a crop of tobacco on Mr. Blyth's land a mile out of the Belleview pike.

Admitted to Bail.

George and Grover Lanter, indicted at the present term, charged with killing Ethel and Sid Ransom on the morning of January 9, 1909, were in court Tuesday on a motion for bail. The Commonwealth was represented by F. C. Greene and Ex-Mayor R. W. Nelson, of Newport, and the defense by Dickerson & Hogan and M. D. Gray.

They were allowed bail at $5,000 for Grover and $10,000 for George in the first of the indictment charging murder, and $2,000 and $3,000 respectively in the second. They made the bonds promptly and were allowed to go free.—Williamstown Courier.

All Enjoyed the Occasion.

Mrs. J. E. Gaines, who resides three miles out on the Petersburg pike, gave, last Friday, one of those big dinners, for which she is famous. A large number of ladies responded to invitaiions to partake of the bountiful spread, and to say a most delightful day was spent by all only describes the occasion very faintly.

A Handsome Stand Sold.

Jesse Kirkpatrick has sold to Hon. J. G. Tomlin, of Walton, a very handsome parlor stand he has made at odd times during the past few months. The stand is composed of 700 pieces of wood, arranged in a most harmonious manner and put together with the greatest of mechanical skill. Mr. Kirkpatrick got $15 for the stand, but says he would not duplicate it for $25.

Had to Turn Back.

For the first time in many months Elmer Conley, carrier on rural route No. 2 failed to make his daily round, last Friday, Gunpowder creek being too high to be crossed at W. C. Weavers. Such conditions were devoutedly wished for months last summer.

A Feast in the Country.

Burlington friends of Mr. and Mrs. Geo. Kreyleich to the number of about a dozen, responded to invitations to dine with them last Thursday, and their hospitable home four miles out on the Petersburg pike was the scene of much pleasure and a veritable feast that day.

Distributing Almanacs.

W. H. Rice, president of Florence Deposit Bank, was in Burlington, last Thursday, distributing copies of the Farmers' Almanac which his bank has issued. Mr. Rice reported everything in fine condition in his town, and looked fine, fat and frisky. He is one of the cleverest among the Florence people.

He Walked Some.

As Elmer Conley, carrier on rural route No. 2, out of Burlington, was rounding to at Hathaway, last Wednesday, the steed he was riding went wrong in one of its propellers—in other words sprained one of its ankles—and Mr. Conley, out of compassion for his lame horse, covered about four miles of the remainder of his route on foot.

A Good Sale.

A fairly good sized crowd attended the sale of Mrs. T. D. and Leslie Goodridge's livestock, farming implements, &c., last Wednesday afternoon, notwithstanding the very ugly weather that prevailed. Good prices were the rule all along the line. Money seemed to be easy and many paid the cash, who, otherwise, would have taken advantage of the period of credit offered.

Telephone Systems Hit Hard.

The sleet, last week, damaged the several telephone companies in the county to a greater extend than any sleet that has fallen since the lines were put up. Poles and wires alike succumbed to the great weight and went down in many places and it required several days to restore the service to its normal condition. The lineman were on the jump and their services were demanded in every direction.

A Big Crop is Certain.

Capt. W. E. Thompsen, Franklin county's member of the Burley District Board, says that with the exception of Henry county, conditions are favorable for a very successful pool this year in all of the counties of the burley district. Reports from the different counties indicate that a larger per cent of the crop will be pooled this year than in either of the two preceding years. Dr. McGinnis, who has been one of the leaders of the Equity movement in Henry county, is very gloomy over the outlook there and practically admits that the chances are very slim for a successful pooling movement this year.—Frankfort special to Louisville Times.

A GOOD SCHOOL

Is What Union Wants and her People Will Get It.

Former County Superintendent of Schools, L. H. Voshell, Assessor B. L. Cleek, James A. Huey and Noah Tanner, all of Union, and influential citizens, were in Burlington, last Wednesday, taking preliminary steps necessary to the organization of a graded school for the Union school district. Union has been on somewhat of a boom for a year or two, and the enterprising citizens of that community deem a good graded school as a strong element in the matter of prosperity, and have inaugurated an effort to establish such a school in their midst. The people of Union have always taken considerable interest in educational matters, and parents have devoted considerable of their means to the ducation of their children, much of which would have been saved had there been located at Union the class of school it is now proposed to establish there. The location and all other conditions are decidedly favorable to the maintainance of a good graded school at Union, and with the backing the move in that direction appears to have there is no doubt but what it will be a go and that at an early day. The people of the proposed district are among the wealthiest and most substantial citizens of the county, amply able to have such improvements and conveniences as they desire, and they will find that money invested in the equipment of a good school will bring many returns and place that part of the county on a still higher plane, and may point many a young man and young woman to useful avenues in life, who, otherwise would never realize the responsibilities by which they are hedged in. It is to be hoped the gentlemen above named and those who are cooperating with them will be successful in their effort to institute a good graded school at Union.

The Fans' Fun.

The local base ball fans have been puzzling their brains over the hit and base problem. Anything pertaining to base ball always finds an audience in Burlington.

There has been sleet enough this year to preserve the fruit and insure a good crop. A good crop of apples, peaches, &c., is certainly due in this part of the country.

Ground Hog Winter Half Gone.

The period set apart for ground hog winter is half gone, and while there has been no severely cold weather yet the coldest weather of the winter has come within the ground hog period.

First Stock Bills.

The first stock bills for the coming season were printed at this office, last Saturday, and were for the fine inbred Red Norman stallion, Wood, and the fine jack, Ramey, the property of J. D. VanLandingham, of Kenton county, near Goshen.

Declamatory Contest.

The declamatory contest next Friday night promises to be decidedly interesting. It will be followed by a drama entitled, "Timothy Delano's Courtship." This will be the first opening of Library Hall to the public, which ought to be an important event in Burlington and vicinity.

Flour Advancing.

In most of the cities of the State flour has advanced twenty cents on the hundred in price. The reason given is that because of the scarcity of wheat and the high price that the millers have to pay for it, flour had to be advanced to make up the rise in wheat. Some of the blame for the high price is placed on John Patton, the Chicago broker who has a corner on approximately 200,000,000 bushels of May wheat.

Preparing for a Large Crop.

The farmers of Pendleton county, encouraged by the high prices paid for the pooled crops, are making preparations for a bumper crop this year. Plant beds have already been prepared in many localities, and farmers are now waiting for the earth to become dry enough to plant seed. Seed in this locality are usually sown in February or early in March and many are now on the anxious seat because of the present wet spell.—Pendletonian.

Honest Injun.

Two capricious young ladies who by the way live in Petersburg, planned to have some fun with a young man who called to spend the evening. They thought it would be great sport to imitate everything he did. When the young man entered the parlor he blew his nose, which each of the girls promptly imitated. Thinking it a peculiar incident, the young man proceeded to stroke his hair. Both girls followed. Then he straightened his collar. They did the same, and a few dimples began to appear in spite of them. Now it was the young man's turn. He was positive of his ground and turned up his trousers.

Pastor and Physician.

The true function of the clergyman is to teach the ethical and spiritual doctrine of Christianity, and as an under shepherd, to visit the flock committed to his care, is the stand taken by Dr. James M. Buckley in the Century, in a discussion of the "Dangers of the Emmanuel Movement," and the reasons why it should not be generally adopted. In the discharge of this duty he should maintain an individual acquaintance with members of the congregation, listen to whatever they communicate, and by counsel assist them. He should be accessible to all, sympathize in sorrow and in joy, and help them bear their burdens. Scrupulous attention should be given the poor and the sick, and the clergyman should be in such relation to reputable physicians and surgeons as to direct those who require advice; he must also have the entree to hospitals. His prayers and communings in the sick-room will sink into the depths of the mental and moral nature of the sufferer, cheering, comforting, strengthening, and reinforce every effort to cure or mitigate his malady, inspiring him with hope of recovery or of immortality. All else the pastor should leave to the physician.

Mysterious disappearances always have a fascination for the curious. Probably to the end of time there will be persons who believe that they know what became of the French dauphin, who, but for the revolution, would have been Louis XVII. Others will maintain that the official record of his death is correct. The fate of Archduke John of Austria is likely to remain as uncertain as that of the dauphin. The archduke renounced his royal claims several years ago, and sailed from London for South America under the name of John Orth. Nothing definite has since been heard of him or of his ship, although he has been reported as living in one part of the world or another, says Youth's Companion. These reports have always been unverified. That the emperor Francis Joseph, the head of the family, thinks his kinsman may still be living was disclosed in a lawsuit in Switzerland not long ago, when, in response to inquiries by the court, it was announced that the emperor had ordered that the fortune of Archduke John, amounting to $8,000,000, be kept intact till 1917, when it may be divided among the heirs.

Now comes the wail of disappointed Paris hostesses at the omission of the "etrennes," those tokens of gratitude which young men are expected to send on New Year's day for hospitalities received. It has long been a pretty custom for the paying off of small debts, but this year there has been a falling off and it is ascribed to the increasing selfishness of man. In London the rule is to take all and give nothing, not even a Christmas card, and Parisians fear the gilded youth they entertain are taking a leaf out of this English custom. Formerly, it was claimed, however impecunious the young men in Paris, they managed to send or bring an etrenne to each of their hostesses whether she was plain or pretty, young or old. Now how different! A few of the most brilliant leaders have been "remembered," the rest had to sing small.

The choice of Prof. Lowell to succeed President Eliot was not a new inspiration. It was the fulfilment of a confident prophecy that has been current in higher educational circles for a long time. Five years ago James Bryce, talking with a Bostonian about Harvard and its distinguished head, indulged his fondness for asking questions by inquiring who would be likely to succeed President Eliot when he retired. Prof. Lowell's name was mentioned, among others, and Mr. Bryce, who has known Prof. Lowell long and intimately, said: "Yes, I have often heard that suggestion, and what an admirable selection it would be!"

The tribute paid to the courageous wireless operator on the Republic, who forgot his own human needs in heroic duty at his post, and well-nigh dropped from exhaustion at it, was a well deserved one. Americans have been called a nation of hero worshipers; rather should it be said that one of the national traits is a generous eagerness to recognize and applaud the best and noblest in human nature. The whole nation is strengthened by such examples.

Who wouldn't be a president and a hunting go? Already the millionaires have preceded Roosevelt to Africa and have laid their plans to entertain him in the jungles on an extensive scale. It might be well, however, for them to search themselves, lest they be included among those malefactors of great wealth for whom he has been hunting a long time.

The Greatest Cruise in History

HAMPTON ROADS, VA.—Battleship races, ship against ship, and squadron against squadron, marked the final leg of the cruise of the Atlantic fleet when the United States armada started from Gibraltar for home. The maneuvers of the fleet, re-enforced by nine warships from home waters, were the most elaborate ever undertaken by United States war vessels. And when the fighting craft cast anchor here February 22, they were in fit condition to steam out to face an enemy.

The program for the reception of the fleet on its return to Hampton Roads was elaborate and worthy of the proud record made by the ships. It practically reversed the program carried out when the fleet sailed.

President Roosevelt on board the Mayflower, anchored between the Horseshoe and Lynn Haven bay, reviewed the fleet as it passed in. Rear Admiral Sperry, the other commanders and executive officers, then went aboard the Mayflower to receive the president's greetings, after which the president in turn visited the flagship of each division and met the assembled officers and six representative sailormen selected from the division.

The cruise has been a practice trip throughout, but it remained for the final lap to institute the maneuvers and tests planned. The intention was to give the vessels the severest trials at the finish of their long journey, in order that any defects in them might be demonstrated.

In addition to the 16 battleships that composed the fleet, there were the Yankton and Panther, two storeships, and two colliers. These were started ahead from Gibraltar. Before they had negotiated much of the distance westward across the Atlantic they were met by the welcoming fleet sent out from the United States. This consisted of the battleships Maine, New Hampshire, Idaho and Mississippi, the armored cruisers Montana and North Carolina, and the scout cruisers Salem, Birmingham and Chester. When they joined the others it made a fleet of 20 battleships, five powerful cruisers and two smaller fighting craft. As soon as the warships were assembled the real work of the homeward cruise was undertaken. Admiral Sperry had framed an elaborate program, in which all the vessels took part.

While the fleet, or the main body of it, jogged along at a pace that brought it into Hampton Roads February 22, the individual ships were put through speed trials and endurance tests. Ships of similar class raced to determine individual excellency, while battleships of different designs were tested one against the other to determine the superiority of style.

There were also races between squadrons, and battle maneuvers, in which squadrons and divisions participated. There also was gunnery practice under practically battle conditions, and new records have been made.

NEW RECORDS FOR SAILING.

None Other to Compare with Achievement of Our Fleet.

SINCE the fabled cruise of the Argonauts of old there have been many famous cruises in history, but none that can compare, either in magnitude of vessels or in length of miles, to the great world cruise just finished by our fleet.

When Admiral Rojestvensky took his doomed ships from the Baltic to the Sea of Japan, this was heralded to all the world as the greatest armed cruise in history, and so it was up to that time. Yet apart from the singular fact that these Russian fighting ships were foredoomed to disaster, what a miserable achievement it was as compared to the magnificent, resistless, onward sweep of our own fighting ships!

From first to last the cruise of the Russian fleet was attended by mishaps, false starts, false alarms, egregious blunders and humiliations of all kinds. Even after the Russian ships had at last got out into the open sea after their ludicrous battle with the British trawlers on the Dogger banks they had to put into every neutral port along the way for coal and provisions, only to be humored or ordered out again, according to the good will of the various port authorities. Then nearly six months had to be spent at Madagascar in refitting, yet during all that time, so Admiral Rojestvensky's second in command has testified, none of the crews of any of the Russian war ships was drilled in target practice.

In short, nothing could be more different than this sad record of the Russian fleet commanders while steaming around Africa and up into the China seas and our own proud record while our 16 battleships, two cruisers, six torpedo boats and an auxiliary fleet of supply ships and colliers steamed around the world.

Significant Historical Fact.

To the historian it cannot but appear as a significant thing that all other previous great cruises in history, with the exception of those undertaken by English-speaking sailors, have only resulted in disaster and shame. There was the great cruise of the Spanish armada, for instance, launched against England by Philip II of Spain, which ended in such utter rout and disaster.

About the same time in the far east the Japanese conqueror, Hideyoshi, undertook to subjugate Korea and China with a formidable fleet of some 750 war junks, many of them armed with brass cannon, yet his fleet, too, was overcome in fair fight by the combined war fleets of China and Korea.

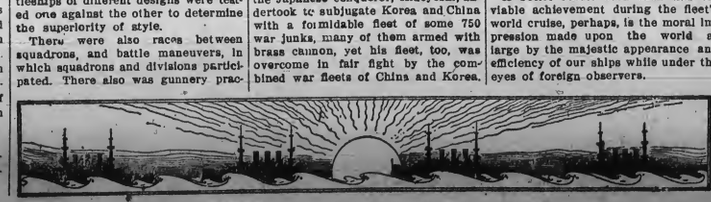
Then there were those ambitious naval projects of the great Napoleon resulting in the famous French cruises to Egypt and afterward to the West Indies and back, only to end in those ever memorable disasters to French sea power at the battle of the Nile and at Trafalgar.

Second Spanish Armada.

Coming down to more modern times, no one can have forgotten that ill fated cruise of another Spanish armada under Admiral Cervera, which ended in the total loss of Spanish sea power at Santiago de Cuba.

All these cruises, like that of Rojestvensky, were remarkable not only for their tragic endings, but for the series of blunders, follies and mishaps that attended them from first to last.

How different in comparison with Nelson and Blake, or even such an early long war cruise as that achieved by old Admiral Drake when he sailed his puny fighting ships all the way from England around the Horn and up to our own waters near what is now Drake's bay!



When President Roosevelt gave his first order that the Atlantic fleet should start for its "practice cruise" to the Pacific from Hampton roads, all the European naval experts on the continent permitted themselves to douht whether our ships could ever be got ready in time, and whether the long cruise could ever be accomplished without serious disasters. But every English speaking sailorman knew in his heart that the great fleet would be all ready and would start exactly on time, to the minute, as it did

Had Confidence in Fleet.

What is more, we all knew that the great fleet would swing around the world, looking in at the Hawaiian Islands, the Philippines, into China and Japan, and back again without the slightest shade of douht in the soul of any American that the fleet would always acquit itself well and achieve what it set out to do.

This, indeed, is the great thing that has been accomplished by the fleet. For the first time in history the Pacific ocean has been put into commission. This is a great fact, a great achievement, the results of which can never be changed or lost. Henceforth in the world's history the Pacific ocean, which first came into international prominence only with Dewey's great victory in Manila bay and the Japanese victories in their own waters, will loom up in historical importance as did the Mediterranean before Columbus' great cruise opened up the Atlantic."

A better result even than this enviable achievement during the fleet's world cruise, perhaps, is the moral impression made upon the world at large by the majestic appearance and efficiency of our ships while under the eyes of foreign observers.

HITS THE TOBACCO TRUST

COMMISSIONER SMITH WANTS INVESTIGATION OF COMBINE.

Relates America's History and Tells of Millions Controlled by Few Men.

Washington.—In a report transmitted to President Roosevelt Thursday night Herbert Knox Smith, commissioner of corporations, presents some highly interesting history of the organization of the "tobacco combination," which, in the magnitude of its business operations, is one of the greatest organizations in America.

The report sets forth the rise of one of the great combinations of the country. In his letter of transmittal, Commissioner Smith says that it "deals with the history, from the standpoint of its organization, of the great tobacco combination. Starting in 1890 as the American Tobacco Company, a manufacturer of cigarettes, with a capital of $25,000,000, the combination has now a net capitalization (excluding inter-company holdings) of $316,346,821. It has absorbed about 250 separate concerns.

"Its history also presents important features of stock manipulation. The financial transactions centering around the organization of the Consolidated Tobacco Company in 1901 are especially noteworthy. At that time a small body of directors and stockholders in the combination believed that the profits of the combination could be greatly increased in the immediate future. They organized the Consolidated Tobacco Company and offered its bonds in exchange for the common stock of the American and the Continental, in order thus to secure for themselves most of the increased profits about to accrue.

"The profits accruing to the common stock of the American and the Continental, after its acquisition by the Consolidated, increased greatly; and the small body of men controling the last-named company—so small, in fact, that six of them held a majority of its stock and thus controlled the entire combination—became entitled to millions of dollars which, had it not been for the Consolidated transaction, would have gone to the original common-stock holders.

"The conduct of this group of men is a proper subject for criticism, however, because they could foresee much better than outside stockholders the large profits about to accrue. They occupied a fiduciary relation to the outside stockholders, and should have shared with them equally the special knowledge acquired by their position.'"

BOMB TERRORIST NABBED.

Plot to Abduct Kansas City Merchant is Foiled.

Kansas City, Mo. — Held at bay by a revolver and a dynamite bomb in the hands of a determined stranger who obtained entrance to his home Tuesday, Lawrence M. Jones, president of the Jones Bros. Dry Goods Company, and one of the wealthiest merchants in the city, was given the alternative of death upon failure to hand over $7,800. He overpowered the man in a desperate struggle after his wife and son had also been brought to face death at the hands of the blackmailer.

In the arrest of the man, who gave his name as C. H. Garnett of Omaha, the police believe a well laid plot to extort money from several wealthy men has been hared. Following the confession of the prisoner, a house in a lonely spot in Independence was explored and found to have been prepared as a prison for the man's intended victims. Secret closets were found in which heavy chains, fastened to rings in the walls, were found, along with strong padlocks and hars. Garnett said that the house had been rented and the prison like features installed so that his victims might be held until he had obtained what money possible and made his escape.

MURDERER OF GIRL CONFESSES.

William Gagle Tells of Luring Child from Home and Slaying Her.

Chicago. — William Gagle arrested on charges of having attacked two South Chicago girls, confessed to the police Tuesday that he killed little Lizzie Schrader of Gary, Ind., more than a year ago, while she was carrying lunch to her father.

The confession was made to Capt Halpin of the South Chicago police station, Chief of Police Rimbach of Hammond and Chief of Police Martin of Gary, Ind. The theory that Gagle was the murderer of the little girl whose dismembered body was found in the woods near Tolleston, Ind., was suggested by Gagle himself, who, while being examined in regard to the attack on his two latest victims, jumped from his chair and shouted:

"I attacked those girls, but I never killed Lizzie Schrader."

The death of the Schrader girl had not been mentioned.

Tenderness.

It was in the hotel of a western mining town that the New England guest, registering in the office, heard a succession of youd yells.

"What in the world is that—a murder going on upstairs?" he demanded.

"No," said the clerk, as he slammed the book and lounged toward the stairs. "It is the spring bed up in No. 5. That tenderfoot up there don't get the hang of it, and every few days he gets one o' the spiral springs screwed into him like a shirt stud. I guess I'll have to go up, if there ain't anything more I can do for you for a few minutes."—Youth's Companion.

Her Logic.

Anna Margaret had a great many toys, and her mother thougbt she ought to give some of them away before Christmas to less fortunate children. Anna Margaret was willing to part with the broken trunk and the cracked set of dishes and the one-legged Teddy bear, and a few other toys that were in the same dilapidated condition. But when it came to her pet baby doll, the one that went to sleep with her every night, she rebelled. Mother assured her that Santa Claus would undoubtedly bring her another doll, even better; but she refused to be comforted.

"Mother," she wailed, "if God sent Aunt Jessie another baby, would she give Baby Jean away?" She kept her doll.—Harper's Bazar.

PRIZE FOOD

Palatable, Economical, Nourishing.

A Nebr. woman has outlined the prize food in a few words, and that from personal experience. She writes:

"After our long experience with Grape-Nuts, I cannot say enough in its favor. We have used this food almost continually for seven years.

"We sometimes tried other advertised breakfast foods but we invariably returned to Grape-Nuts as the most palatable, economical and nourishing of all.

"When I quit tea and coffee and began to use Postum and Grape-Nuts I was a nervous wreck. I was so irritable I could not sleep nights, had no interest in life.

"After using Grape-Nuts a short time I began to improve and all these ailments have disappeared and now I am a well woman. My two children have been almost raised on Grape-Nuts, which they eat three times a day.

"They are pictures of health and have never had the least symptom of stomach trouble, even through the most severe siege of whooping cough they could retain Grape-Nuts when all else failed.

"Grape-Nuts food has saved doctor bills, and has been, therefore, a most economical food for us."

SUNDRY CIVIL BILL

Reported To National House of Representatives.

NOTABLE IN SEVERAL RESPECTS

Carries Largest Appropriations of Any Measure of its Kind and Limits Promiscuous Transfer of Secret Service Agents.

Washington, Feb. 20.—The sundry civil bill, carrying appropriations for the civil expenditures of the federal government for the fiscal year beginning July 1, 1909, which was reported to the house Friday, is notable in more than one respect.

First, it carries the largest appropriations of any bill of its kind, the aggregate being $137,022,070.93, which is $31,306,701.45 in excess of the appropriations for the current fiscal year.

In the second place, it re-enacts the provision placing a limitation upon the promiscuous transfer of secret service agents, to which the president took such serious exceptions and which led to the controversy between him and congress during this session.

In another respect the bill deserves attention, and that is the liberal manner in which the committee has provided the various executive departments with funds to carry on investigations of fraud and violations of the law.

For example it gives $1,000,000 to the secretary of the interior for the protection of the public domain and the investigation of entries of public lands. This is double the amount appropriated last year and four times the sum given him two years ago.

The committee also showed its kindly feeling toward Mr. Garfield by including an item of $2,500,000 for the erection of a new building for the use of the land and Indian bureau, the reclamation service and the geological survey, all of which are branches of the interior department. The bill carries many items of local interest in the Ohio valley states.

For rivers and harbors in the Ohio valley the following amounts were authorized:

The Obio river below Pittsburg, Dams 13 and 18, $220,000; Dam 37, $230,000; No. 8, $36,000; No. 11, $300,000; No. 26, $300,000; harbor of Cleveland, $377,500; Big Sandy river, West Virginia and Kentucky, $50,000; Kentucky river, Kentucky Dams 12 and 13, $210,000.

For the enforcement of Section 20 of the Hepburn bill $350,000 is appropriated, the same as last year.

The sum of $250,000 was voted a year ago only after the president had written to the speaker and had called several members of the white house to consult on the subject. Testimony taken by the committee showed that during the seven months of the present year only $42,000 of the fund had been expended, and in this amount was included the salary of 12 examiners for whom maintenance was suggested by the committe a year ago from another fund.

In the bill the president is authorized, with the consent of the Republic of Cuba, to invite proposals for removing the wreck of the battleship maine from Havana harbor and to communicate with congress as soon as may be practicable estimates based upon the proposals received thereunder.

The largest item in the bill is for continuation of work on the Panama canal. For this purpose $33,638,000 is appropriated, or $4,000,000 more than is carried in the current sundry civil appropriation bill for that expenditure. There will be a deficiency this year of about $5,000,000. The second largest item is $19,574,514 for rivers and harbors construction work authorized by law. Another large item is $18,618,646, for the construction of public buildings.

IN PERILOUS PLIGHT.

Steamer Starin Aground and Rescuing Tugs Have a Hard Time.

Bridgeport, Ct., Feb. 20.—The passenger and freight steamer John H. Starin, from New Haven for New York, went aground Friday night on the flats outside the eastern breakwater at the entrance to the Bridgeport harbor and now lies in a dangerous position.

A howling southwesterly gale has kicked up such a heavy sea in Long Island sound that none of the tugboats called out by Starin's signals of distress can approach without extreme danger of going aground.

The vessel is listing about 45 degrees. The tug Sarah McWilliams, after several attempts, finally succeeded in getting close enough to the steamer to rescue the one passenger on board and the crew. The Starin is filling rapidly and will probably break up in a few hours.

7,000 KILLED BY QUAKE

LATEST REPORTS SWELL PERSIAN DISASTER'S DEATHS.

Sixty Towns Laid Low—News of Violent Earthquake on January 23 Just Received.

Teberan, Persia.—It is now believed that fully 7,000 persons lost their lives in the earthquake in the province of Luristan, western Persia. Sixty villages were destroyed.

The news was received Wednesday and is the first accurate location of the violent earth shock of January 23, it having been supposed up to-day that the disturbance had centered in western Asia, in Asiatic Russia, or even in the waters of the Indian ocean. The records showed that the tremors were practically the same force as those which on December 28 converted the coast regions of Sicily and Calabria into a scene of desolation and ruin.

The province of Luristan is very mountainous and sparsely settled. It is about 300 miles southwest of Teheran and the only communication with the Persian capital is by courier.

Constantinople, Turkey. — No further reports have been received here of the earthquake which destroyed a number of government buildings and dwelling houses at Sivas, in Asiatic Turkey, and the rumor given publicity in the United States that 10,000 persons had lost their lives is clearly a gross exaggeration. The actual loss of life bas not yet been learned, but so far as the present information goes 30 persons were killed.

San Juan, Rico. — Heavy earthquakes were felt throughout the island of Porto Rico Wednesday. The inhabitants were awakened by the oscillations and their alarm was great. No damage, however, was done.

NO AMERICANS IN BIG FIRE.

Victims of the Acapulco Disaster Are All Mexicans.

Mexico City.—Late dispatches from Acapulco, where the Flores theater was burned Sunday night while the structure was crowded at a gala performance given in honor of Gov. Damian Flores of the state of Guerrero, bring varying estimates of the loss of life.

They agree in declaring, bowever, that the dead will exceed 200, while some place the figure as high as 350. Most of the dead were charred and burned beyond recognition so that it probably will take several days to obtain an accurate list of the dead. Maxwell K. Meorehead, United States consul, has sent a dispatch to Washington, saying no Americans lost their lives in tbe fire.

Senators Would Protect Pacific.

Washington.—One-half of the United States navy should be kept on the Pacific coast at all times is the opinion of the senate. An amendment to the naval bill was agreed to Tuesday night providing that in the discretion of the president one-half of the navy sball be kept in Pacific waters, so far as practicable.

The president already has the authority to so divide the fleet, but the amendment amounts to an expression of congress in favor of such.

SMOOTH THE PATH FOR KNOX.

House Finally Settles the Constitutional Question.

Washington.—The controversy over the legislative appropriation bill, in connection with the much discussed salary of tbe secretary of state, involving the eligibility of Senator Knox for that office, was settled in the house of representatives Thursday when the bill was sent to conference and the committee authorized to consider the salary provision as if in disagreement. This gives the committee power to reduce the pay from $12,000 to $8,000, its former figure. The Republicans were caught napping when a resolution by Mr. Fitzgerald was adopted disagreeing to tbe senate amendments creating the office of under-secretary and fourth assistant secretary of state.

The post office bill, carrying appropriations of over $232,000,000 was passed by the senate after a stormy debate during which Senator Penrose, in charge of the measure, made an angry assault upon Senator La Follette who had entered into a general criticism of senate committees of what he termed their unwarranted delay in reporting great appropriation bills.

URGES WAR PREPARATIONS.

Gen. Bell Says America's Prospects for Conflict Are Increasing.

Albany, N. Y. — Maj. Gen. J. Franklin Bell, chief of staff, U. S. A., addressing the member of the National Guard association of the state of New York at its annual dinner Wednesday night, declared that in his judgment the prospects of war in the future are greater than they have been in the past. "I am no glutton for war," said Gen. Bell, "but if war must come I want to see my country as well prepared as it is possible to be."

Gen. Bell discussed the lack of military policy in the United States and the need of preparation for war. "I hope our country may never be involved in trouble," he said, "but in a time of peace we must prepare for war, and it is gratifying to know that such preparation is being made. In my judgment our prospects of trouble in tbe future are greater than they have been in the past."

New York World and Indianapolis News Chiefs Charged with Villifying President, Morgan, Root, C. P. Taft and Cromwell.

Washington.—Bench warrants were issued Wednesday for the arrest of Joseph Pulitzer, Caleb M. Van Hamm and Robert H. Lyman of New York, proprietor and editors of the New York World, and for Delevan Smith and Charles R. Williams, owners of the Indianapolis News, for criminal libel in connection with the publication in those newspapers of charges of irregularities in the purchase by the United States government of the Panama canal property from the French owners.

The indictments on which the warrants were based were returned by the United States grand jury sitting in this city and the warrants were issued later by the clerk of criminal court No. 1. The warrants are directed against all five of the natural defendants of the two newspapers. The summons requires the corporate defendant (the Press Publishing Company) of New York to appear in court forthwith to answer to indictment.

Theodore Roosevelt, William H. Taft, Elihu Root, J. Pierpont Morgan, Charles P. Taft, Douglas Robinson and William Nelson Cromwell are named in the inidctments as the persons alleged to have been villified by the stories appearing in the two newspapers.

Copies of the summons and of the indictment were served Wednesday evening upon the Press Publishing Company by services on Otto Carmichael, its agent in this jurisdiction. The certified copies will be filed with United States Commissioner John R. Shields, in New York, who will issue warrants for the arrest of the natural defendants of the New York World who will be brought before him to show cause why they should not be extradicted to this jurisdiction for trial.

In the event that the commissioner should hold the indictment sufficient and the offense is one upon which the defendants may be extradited to this jurisdiction, the defendants can sue a writ of habeas corpus and have the commissioner's decision reviewed by the United States district court for the southern district of New York. Should the decision of this court also be adverse to their interests, the case can then be taken to the supreme court of the United States for final review. This proceeding was followed in the case of State Senator George E. Green of New York, who was indicted in this city about six years ago in connection with the post office irregularities.

If the defendants should pursue the course outlined above at least a year probably will elapse before they can be brought before the bar of the district supreme court for trial.

Indianapolis, Ind.—Delavin Smith, Charles R. Williams, owners of the Indianapolis News, who were indicted by the federal grand jury in Washington Wednesday, announced that they will contest extradition to the District of Columbia for trial on the ground that it was committed in Indianapolis, the place of the publication of the News.

"Your supper," what Courtney Walton would have eaten for dinner if he had been there, said he. We thanked him and said, "this is twice or three times you have remembered me." "You are mistaken, this is the first time," said Mr. Clore. When Mr. Clore does a favor or an act of kindness he don't remember it five minutes, but if you do him a favor he never forgets it. Died—Mrs. Marshall Elliott, aged 72 years, from pneumonia, at her home near Fiskburg, Feb. 26th. Mrs. Elliott was beloved by a large circle of friends who sorrow over the loss of a most lovable woman of the most loyal character. She was a very large woman, weighing about 285 pounds, and while everything was done to save her life to her griefstricken family yet medical science was unavailing. The funeral took place Sunday at Williamstown.

Mrs. Pat Feirock, aged 70 years, died at her home near town, Feb. 24th, from heart disease, after an illness of only two days. Her husband died about a year ago, and six children survive her, all of whom were at her bedside when the sad parting came. Mrs. Feirock was a native of Ireland and came to this country when a small child. She was one of the kindest hearted women that ever lived in this quarter and everybody loved her for her true christian character, her devotion to her family and her goodness to everybody with whom she came in contact. The funeral took place Saturday at the St. Mary's Catholic church in Covington, being a devout member of that faith.

The sad information was received here last week of the death of James A. Allphin, who succumbed to the ravages of consumption at Tucson, Arizona, where he went about a year ago in hopes that the inroads of the disease would be arrested. He was the only child of Mr. and Mrs. Benj. B. Allphin and was about 22 years old. His parents were at his bedside when the final summons came. The deceased was a young man of sterling integrity, and his life promised much pleasure and comfort to his parents who idolized him because of his gentle disposition, his obedience to their wishes, and the interest he at all times manifested in their welfare. Mr. Allphin attended medical college at Louisville, and the last year when he was to graduate the terrible blight on his health made its appearance and he was obliged to abandon his studies and seek the genial climate of a more temperate quarter, and his parents, thoroughly alarmed as to his future, left nothing undone to bring a restoration of health. Alas, our fondest hopes are doomed to disappointment, but when it comes to the taking away of one so dear to our hearts, the anguish and sorrow is so great that time, the great soother, it seems, alone can soften the deep affliction that such a death brings to the sorrowing ones, and this would have little effect were it not that we look forward to the time when there will be a joyful reunion where sorrow and pain never come and death with its frightful mien never visits to rend the tenderest of the heart's affections. The multitude of friends of Mr. and Mrs. Allphin tender their heartfelt sympathy to them in their great bereavement, though it may not assuage their grief. The remains of Mr. Allphin reached here Saturday evening, and the funeral took place at South Fork Christian church of which the deceased was a worthy member, Rev. Edgar C Riley conducting the services and speaking words of consolation to the large gathering of sorrowing relatives and friends, who so tenderly assisted in laying the remains to rest in the cemetery there.

CARD OF THANKS—We desire to express our high appreciation and gratitude to the many good friends at Walton, and especially to Mr. and Mrs. Hayes A. Miller, and to the undertaker Scott Chambers, for the many expressions of friendship and neighborly love in our great affliction in the death of our dear son James A. Allphin. This method but feebly expresses the great and tender feeling we have for all who tried to lighten our heavy burden of sorrow, and we will ever remember it with grateful hearts. Very respectfully yours.

MR. AND MRS. BENJ. B. ALLPHIN

The sleep that knows no awakening in this world sorrowfully closed the eyes of Mrs. Mabel Edwards—Curley at her home in Tuscon, Arizona, last Friday morning, Feb. 26, and brought that deep grief that death alone can bring to a happy little home, and the telegram that brought the information here to her old Kentucky home saddened many hearts at the scene of her childhood. About nine years ago this beautiful girl was wooed and won as a bride and helpmeet in life by Frank E. Curley, and the sun never shone more brightly on two young lives, nor were the prospects in life's lottery more propitious to two young people; but that lurking enemy of the human race, consumption, laid its insidious hand on the dear wife, and then the cloud of fear and dispondency came across the threshold of this happy home. A milder climate being suggested as the means of another lease on life the young couple went to Tuscon, Arizona, where Mrs. Curley greatly improved, and there was great rejoicing that perhaps the disease had lost its hold; but its fatal sting had been inflicted, and last Friday the last sad good-bye was said to those so dear to her loving heart. Mrs. Curley was a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. S. L. Edwards and was born in Walton thirty-three years ago, and here by her loving disposition, noble character, and high christian virtue she entwined herself in the heart's affection of all, and each and every one of us feel that in her death we have lost a near and dear one; but oh! how sad must be the feeling of the husband and little daughter, bereft of the sunshine of their lives, and the grief of the parents who have lost the idol of their hearts. The reunion in that peaceful home above is the only consolation afforded, but our deepest sympathy is tendered them in this sorrowful hour. The remains of Mrs. Curley, accompanied by her husband and their little eight year old daughter, Marie, reached here last night, and the funeral will take place tomorrow from the Baptist church at 2 p. m., the services being conducted by Rev. J. B. Harris, of the Methodist church, of which Mrs. Curley was a faithful member, the obsequies being attended by a large concourse of sorrowing relatives and friends.

Mr. and Mrs. Eli Conrad entertained the following guests at their hospitable home near town during the past week: Mr. and Mrs. Clarence Callen, of Columbus, O., Raymond Phillips, of Campbellsburg; Mr. and Mrs. Maude Robinson and sons, Ell and Lewis, of Union, and Mrs. Arminta I. Conrad, of Devon.

Little Virginia Beverly, the pretty seven year old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. S. W. Beverly, fell while skating on rolle skates on the pavement near their home Sunday evening and broke her right arm just above the elbow. There was such a bad break to the bones that the little sufferer was taken to Cincinnati to have the X-Rays applied so as to have any foreign substance or broken pieces of bone taken out and the injured limb properly set, and she was able to return and is now much improved.

Justice and Charity.

Jewish charity will not be true to itself until it recognizes, and, having recognized, cries aloud so that its voice be heeded, the half is not greater than the whole. Mankind must be in the saddle and ride things. Property is less than man. Justice is more than charity. The charity of to-day ought to become the justice of every day, declares Rabbi S. S. Wise, in an address before the National Conference of Jewish Charities. The only preventive charity is justice, and justice is not charity. Charity can never rightly become more than the complement and crown of justice. Millions for charity and not one cent for justice must be superseded by: Everything for justice. This conference must bring much abused, but little tried, justice into better repute. Upon our age this conference must press the prophetic note: Justice, justice shalt thou pursue. It must reassert the command of Micah: Do justice and love mercy. Before mercy, justice! Justice ever and mercy superadded! Is not much of charity necessitated by social injustice, the apparently cureless injustices of the present order? What injustice hath done justice alone can undo; what injustice hath undone, justice and not charity shall restore.

Freak Pillars of Society.

But it is a social philosopher, methinks, who should be most grateful to Curio Hall. Its existence spells safety for the existing social order, declares R. L. Hart in the Atlantic. Think you it is the progress of enlightenment that sanctions and perpetuates our scheme of human relationships? Far otherwise. Rather is it the survival of benightedness. So long as endures the gallery of "exclusive living oddities," with pitiful blockheads to gape at them, so long will there abound those scullions, scavengers, stokers, flunkies and wretched wage-minions upon whose docility we depend for our maintenance. Given intelligence to perceive the joke implied in their adoration of abnormalities, they might detect the huge, historic, practical joke played upon them by destiny. At long, long intervals—for us happily long—they get fleeting glimpses of its point. When that occurs, there results the process known as revolution, which Charles Dudley Warner defined as "turning society over, and putting the best underground as a fertilizer."

"For God's sake, go and see my wife and babies, and do what you can for them," wrote a stranger to a high official of the Salvation Army, the other day. "I can't help them, for I'm just out of jail, but I'm going into a lumber camp to see if I can do something. But don't you think of me. I don't deserve any pity or sympathy. Only please do what you can for them." The appeal was promptly heeded; but a gift of food and clothing did not close the case, and the official's report showed how far-sighted and sympathetic is the philanthropy of the present time. "I'm trying to get at the man who wrote that letter," he said. "There's good stuff in him. He's worth saving."

Letters mailed in the United States for Germany, and dispatched direct, and not via England or France, are now two cents an ounce or fraction of an ounce. Persons who wish letters for Germany sent by England or France (the quickest route) must fully prepay postage thereon at the Universal Postal Union rate of five cents. The reduced rate applies only to letters mailed in the states and territories of the United States, including Alaska, on the mainland of North America, and does not extend to letters mailed in Hawaii, Porto Rico, the Philippines or other possessions of the United States.

The fact that more than a hundred freshmen in a western college have been obliged to enter a spelling class, because each of them misspelled 20 or more words from a list of 200 of no great difficulty, has led to some inquiry at other colleges. Of ten prominent institutions of learning, one reports that one-tenth are poor spellers, and two declare that they must put one-fifth into that category. Of the others, some say that the spelling is "fair," one declares it to be "atrocious," and three say that the standard is "high." The pupils in the technical schools are much poorer spellers than those in the colleges.

Hereafter the steamship companies bringing immigrants to America must provide about seven cubic yards of air space for each person. The object of this rule, which was lately enacted into law by congress, is to prevent the overcrowding of the steerage and the consequent danger to the health of those who have to travel in that part of the ship.

New York. — President-elect Taft has announced the cabinet officers for his administration which will open with his inauguration into office March 4. With the announcement he confirmed the selection of Franklin MacVeagh, the Chicago merchant, who, it has been rumored for some time, was hilled for a place among the new executive's advisers.

Aides of New President.

The complete cabinet is:

Secretary of State—Philander Chase Knox of Pennsylvania.

Secretary of the Treasury—Franklin MacVeagh of Illinois.

Secretary of War—Jacob M. Dickinson of Tennessee.

Attorney General—George W. Wickersham of New York.

Postmaster General — Frank H. Hitchcock of Massachusetts.

Secretary of the Navy—George Von L. Meyer of Massachusetts.

Secretary of the Interior—Richard A. Ballinger of Washington.

Secretary of Agriculture—James Wilson of Iowa.

Secretary of Commerce and Labor—Charles Nagel of Missouri.

Jacob M. Dickinson, who is a Chicagoan, besides having a residence in Tennessee, was chosen as secretary of war to fill the position which Mr. Taft held before he became a candidate for the office to which he was elected last November.

On Senator Knox the president will rely more than any other of his cabinet. His admiration for the eminent Pennsylvanian is of long standing, and he believes that in him he has found a man who will steer a clear course in any storm that may arise during his coming administration. It has been on his judgment to a great extent that the other selections for cabinet officers were made.

Frank H. Hitchcock and George Von L. Meyer give Massachusetts a double representation in the Taft administration, but it is understood that Mr. Taft could hardly avoid taking both these men.

Chicago Gets Two.

Chicago, in a sense, has really two representatives in Mr. Dickinson and Mr. MacVeagh, although the former is officially credited to Tennessee in the south. The south in a sense gets a second representative in Charles Nagel of St. Louis, who is to be secretary of commerce and labor, succeeding Mr. Straus of New York.

The Pacific coast and the far west is represented by Richard A. Ballinger, whose knowledge of the questions arising in the distribution of lands and of forest preserves is believed to fit in eminently for the office of secretary of the interior.

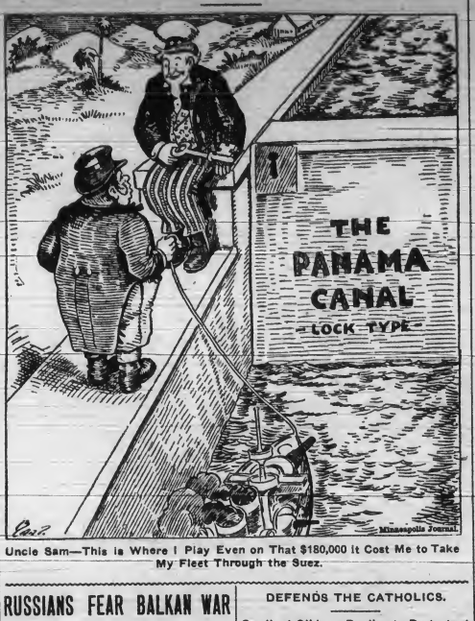
Mr. Taft evidently believed that in the presidency Ohio had been given a full share of the honors, and is known to have appreciated the fact that a number of eminent Buckeye statesmen showed a becoming modesty in refusing to push their claims for recognition.

The great middle west will have Secretary Wilson of Iowa as its representative. He will continue as head of the department of agriculture, and no selection made by Mr. Taft will receive more widespread approval. During the 12 years that Mr. Wilson has been secretary of agriculture he has shown an efficiency that made any other suggestion for the office impossible. On March 4 he will have made a record in length of service of cabinet officers.

SEEK MRS. GUNNESS' MONEY.

Relatives of Victim of Laporte Woman Make Test Case.

Laporte, Ind.—The first of several cases to recover blood money obtained by Mrs. Belle Gunness from the men she lured into her murder-house on the promise of marriage was brought in the Laporte circuit court Friday, Asel Helgelein bringing action for $2,893.20, the amount Belle Gunness obtained from Andrew Helgelein before she killed him. It is understood that in the event judgment is awarded Helgelein, relatives of other victims will bring suit for the amounts alleged to have been contributed to the amassing of Mrs. Gunness' estate hy the men she duped into visiting her under promise of marriage.



Ten Killed in Hamburg.

Hamburg.—Ten persons were killed and 17 injured Wednesday night through the slipping of a gangway between the wharf and the steamer Kaiserin Auguste Victoria, which was being loaded preparatory to sailing for New York on Saturday next. No passengers were among the victims.

Iowa Chief Fears Lynching.

Des Moines, Ia.—Chief Gallagher of Ottumwa Friday sweated John Gunken, the negro now in jail at Albia, charged with criminal assault and murder of Clara Rosen at Ottumwa three weeks ago. The chief refuses to give out what information he extracted for fear of a lynching. Excitement in the state is running high over the numerous assaults upon white women by negroes. At Creston Friday a report that three women had been assaulted aroused the populace to a frenzy.

RUSSIANS FEAR BALKAN WAR

DUMA LEADERS BELIEVE CONFLICT INEVITABLE.

France Is Uneasy Over the Situation, But English Government Is Not So Apprehensive of Danger.

St. Petersburg.—The pessimism with regard to the Balkan crisis is steadily deepening in diplomatic circles, where it is believed that Austrian action against Servia may be expected within a fortnight unless a solution to the present grave problem is soon arranged.

Foreign office officials state that Russia is not disposed to consider an invasion of Servia alone as a casus belli, but there is fear that the government's hand may be forced under such circumstances by popular feeling. The beginning of hostilities would throw thousands of Russian volunteers to the Servian ranks.

The duma leaders, who visited the foreign office Wednesday expressed themselves as convinced that war is inevitable. Information received from Kiev indicates that no military measures have yet been undertaken on the southwestern frontier, but all applications of officers for leave of absence have been refused and the Kiev department is ready for instant mobilization.

The Novoe Vremya publishes a spirited reply to what it describes as Austrian and German "threats."

Paris.—The attitude assumed by Austria-Hungary and Russia in the difficulty between the former power and Servia is creating considerable uneasiness here. France is anxious to play the role of pacifier, but Germany having declined the French, British and Italian overtures for intervention at Vienna and suggested instead intervention at Belgrade, the French government has decided, in view of the attitude of Russia, to initiate no new action except with the complete approval of Russia and Great Britain.

London.—The British government is not so apprehensive regarding the situation in the Balkans as are some of the other governments of Europe, judging from the indications in dispatches received here from various continental capitals. The foreign office, of course, recognizes that an undue prolongation of the tension between Austria-Hungary and Servia is dangerous, but it is hopeful of an early relaxation in the situation. So far as is known officially here, Germany has not declined to participate in a joint action, and negotiations still are going on with the view of a proffer of good offices.

Mrs. Vanderbilt Fights Disease.

New York.—Mrs. William K. Vanderbilt, Sr., has given more than $1,000,000, it is announced, for the erection of four model tenements for persons suffering with tuberculosis. The buildings are to be operated in connection with Dr. Henry L. Shively's tuberculosis clinic of the Presbyterian hospital in New York city, and are to be known as the Shively sanitary tenements.

Five Indiana Counties Dry.

Indianapolis, Ind.—Five Indiana counties that hold local option elections Tuesday, voted dry. They are Grant, Howard, Daviess, Adams and Newton. It is possible that the "wets" won in the cities of Kokomo and Marion. One hundred and forty-three saloons are put out of business.

Stephenson Claims Victory.

Madison, Wis.—Senator Stephenson has appealed from the ruling of Lieut. Gov. Strange that no election resulted on the separate ballot by assembly and senate on January 26, and has submitted his case to the United States senate for a decision. Senator Stephenson's claim to the seat in the senate that will be vacated by law on March 4 is that he received a majority of the votes cast in each house on the separate ballot taken on January 26. The senate committee on elections will decide the case.

DEFENDS THE CATHOLICS.

Cardinal Gibbons Replies to Protestant Charges of Disloyalty.

Baltimore, Md.—An article will appear in the March number of the North American Review from Cardinal Gibbons in which the cardinal r s categorically to charges made by Lutheran and Baptist ministers affecting the loyalty of members of the Catholic communion.

Cardinal Gibbons begins by saying that "fifteen millions of Catholics live their lives in our land with undisturbed belief in the perfect harmony existing between their religion and their duties as American citizens.

"It never occurs to their minds to question the truth of a belief which all their experience confirms. Love of religion and love of country hurn together in their hearts. They love their church as the divine spiritual society set up by Jesus Christ, through which they are brought into a closer communion with God, learn his revealed truth and his holy law, receive the help they need to lead Christian lives and are inspired with the hope of eternal bappiness."

ARREST ORGANIZED SWINDLERS.

Band Charged with Frauds of About $500,000.

Little Rock, Ark. — That their field of operations extended over the entire country and their victims numbered nearly 100 from whom almost $500,000 was secured during the past two years was the declaration Tuesday of the state and federal officials who caused the arrest of J. C. Maybry and three alleged confederates, leaders, it is charged, of a most thoroughly organized band of swindlers, on a charge of using the mails to defraud. In searching the effects of Mayhry records were found giving the names, the authorities declare, of men who were victimized, and as well as over 300 others, stationed in every state in the union and in several provinces in Canada, who, the officials assert, acted as agents of the men.

TORNADO KILLS THIRTEEN.

Southeastern Arkansas Swept by a Cyclone.

Little Rock, Ark. — Lonoke, Prairie, Woodruff and Poinsett counties in southeastern Arkansas were swept by a cyclone Tuesday and 13 persons were killed. Many others were injured. Fisher was almost completely wrecked. The damage to property is many thousands of dollars.

Because of the interruption of wire communication with the storm-swept territory, only the most meager information was available. At Fisher, a town of 400 inhabitants, it is reported that but two buildings remain standing and that many injured are imprisoned among the wreckage of the razed buildings.

Drunkards Denied Wives.

Springfield, Ill.—Young men who frequent saloons will not be permitted to enter into matrimonial relations in Illinois if a bill introduced in the house Wednesday is enacted into law, and it probably will pass.

The bill was introduced by Representative Groves and amends the marriage laws of the state by declaring an habitual drunkard incapable of contracting marriage and defining an "habitual drunkard" to be a person who becomes intoxicated twice in a year.

Reads Poems, Weds Author.

Bloomington, Ill.—The romantic marriage at Windsor, Mo., of John F. Myers, a rich retired farmer here, aged 74, who has obtained local fame as a poet, and Minnie L. Barrett, aged 27, became known Friday. Attracted by a volume of Myers' poems Miss Barrett corresponded with him and a wedding followed.

Two More Indiana Counties Dry.

Indianapolis, Ind.—Two more Indiana counties—Carroll and Gibson—voted dry in elections Friday.

NEGRO BOASTS OF FIENDISH CRIMES

Says He Murdered Miss Rosen—Planned the Deed While He Was in Prison.

Des Moines, Ia., March 1.—John Junken, the negro who confessed that on February 5 he murdered Clara Rosen at Ottumwa, was brought to Des Moines Sunday morning from the county jail at Albia. The slayer was locked up here for safekeeping, as feeling runs high in Ottumwa, the scene of five brutal murders of women by negroes.

Junken, in a confession here Sunday, declared he had deliberately planned to commit the deed at Ottumwa while he was still an inmate of the Madison penitentiary, serving time for robbing and beating a woman. It was his boast that he would again "do the trick" if given a chance. He boasted of his ability to assault defenseless women.

The information came in a letter from Albert Evans, a Missouri negro, who was a cellmate with Junken at Fort Madison.

"Junken is guilty of that crime," writes the negro Evans. "He planned it while still in the penitentiary, and when he left I knew it was his intention to pull off the stunt as soon as he had an opportunity."

Evans' statement is given more weight on account of the fact that Junken killed Miss Rosen just a few days after he had been liberated from Fort Madison prison. He was released January 13.

Junken plans to stand trial, and has made a request that Attorney Joe Brown, one of the best-known negro lawyers in the state, be sent to him for consultation.

"I was full of dope, I tell you—chuck full of it!" he moaned as he tossed about on his narrow bunk in the cage. He told the sheriff he had been chewing cocaine, hut on the way to Des Moines he said he had been eating opium.

Albert Evans will be brought up from Missouri if necessary, and the letter introduced, together with his sworn statements.

Since his incarceration in the county jail he Junken has remained in his bunk, weeping almost all of the time. Nothing satisfactory as to what prompted him to murder Miss Rosen, who, he claims, he attacked with the sole purpose of robbery, could be gained from him.

Junken received his first big scare when the Ottumwa mob visited the Albia jail. The fear that he would be lynched so preyed upon him that he would not stay alone, and desired the sheriff or a guard to be constantly at his side.

The coming of the mob to Albia is responsible for Junken's confession. He began Friday to make his admission, and at that time implicated Weaver, another Ottumwa negro, in the affair, and sought to place all blame on him. But prior to this time he had confessed his guilt to another negro of the Albia jail.

SLASHED THE WIDOW

He Courted, and Then Ex-Fire Chief Used Razor on Himself.

Pittsburg, Pa., March 1.—With Mrs. Anna Baxter, a widow whom he had courted for several years, sitting on his lap in her home Sunday, William Gearhart, captain of Engine Company No. 27, former chief of the department, suddenly drew a razor from his pocket and slashed the woman across the threat. She called for help, and her son and daughter dragged ner from Gearhart's arms and notified the police.

When the police arrived they found Gearhart lying on the floor, his throat cut and a big knife in his hand. The razor he had used on the woman was lying on the piano. Both victims were taken to a hospital, where it is said their recovery is doubtful. No cause is assigned for the deed.

Gales Raging on Atlantic.

New York, March 1.—Incoming trans-Atlantic liners Sunday reported violent gales and heavy tumbling seas during the voyage. Among them were the Cunarder Lucania, the French liner La Touraine, and the Anchor line steamer Caledonia. While all sustained some damage about the decks, due to heavy boarding seas, nothing serious occurred. The Caledonia ran into a field of ice in the midst of which floated a huge iceberg, estimated to have been from 100 to 150 feet high. There was a perceptible drop in the temperature, while the steamer was near the berg.

Negro Wounded Two.

Clarksdale, Miss., March 1.—Deputies J. C. Taylor and H. L. Talbert were shot Sunday night by Lee Banks, a desperate negro, whom they were attempting to arrest for wife beating. Taylor will die. Talbert received the second load of a double barreled shotgun in the hand. The negro escaped.

Ninth Attempt Successful.

St. Louis, March 1.—The ninth attempt of Mrs. Elizabeth Lowery to end her life was successful Sunday. She drank poison because of despondency. In the last three years she drank poison six times, used a razor once and tried to hang herself twice.

In Blizzard's Grasp.

Paris, March 1.—Snow has fallen in Paris almost continuously for the past 48 hours and a blizzard of unprecedented proportions prevails throughout France. Many deaths are reported from exposure.

WESTERN CANADA'S SPLENDID CROP YIELD FOR 1908.

AMERICANS PROFITED LARGELY AND SEND BACK SATISFACTORY REPORTS.

The census branch of the Department of Agriculture, Ottawa, Canada, has completed its returns of the showing of Western Canada's grain yield for 1908, and the reports make very interesting reading. In the three provinces of Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta, which comprise what may be known as Central Canada, there was a total wheat yield of about 107,000,000 bushels, worth to the farmer about $85,000,000; in addition to this the oat, barley and flax crops were worth another $35,000,000. Letters have been received from many of the settlers from the United States. From these, that of Rev. Oscar L. King has been selected. He lives in the vicinity of Edmonton, Alberta, and what he says will be of interest to those who contemplate moving to Central Canada. Every line of the letter is interesting. Those who wish for the particulars as to how to secure homesteads and preemptions should write any Canadian Government agent. Mr. King says:

"Mr. M. V. McInnnes, Detroit, Michigan: I am well satisfied with Alberta. This country offers excellent opportunities for anyone to make a good home for himself and family if he is willing to put up with a few hard knocks for the first two or three years. But it is worth a few hard knocks to get a 160-acre farm of rich, productive land with no mortgage on it. This province is well fitted for grains, stock raising and dairying. We have found the climate generally healthful, more healthful than Michigan, and although the thermometer sometimes drops to 40 degrees below zero in winter, yet we do not seem to feel that temperature any more than we did 5 or 10 degrees below zero in Michigan. We like the winters.

"The Government takes great interest in the education of the people and quickly aids the settlers in establishing schools where they are called for. The schools, though graded differently than those in the States, are efficient and advancing. Our great drawback has been the limited and inadequate railway facilities, but new roads are being rapidly built and many more are projected through various parts of the province. The new policy of the Alberta government to construct a great many branch lines throughout the province will greatly help all parts of the country. If those new settlers who have to go back a considerable distance from existing railroads and towns to find free homesteads will but locate along the line of a projected railroad they will in two or three years be near both town and railroad. When I first came to this country three and a half years ago the homestead I took was 75 miles from a railroad town; now there is a railroad 25 miles north, another 25 miles south, and a third is being built through my neighborhood.

"I think the prairie country or country that is partly prairie offers much better opportunities than the hilly portions."

If thou speakest what thou wilt, thou shalt hear what thou wouldst not.—Blas.

CZAR of BLACK WOLF SWAMP

BY A. E. MEIGS

COPYRIGHT BY A. E. MEIGS

THE CAMP

THOSE who practice still hunting for deer, for the pure sport, must know the habits of the gamey creature, must find the places where he roams, feeds and rests, must move silently, slowly, patiently, minding neither icy blasts nor rainfall, and then beat the quarry at his own game of hide and seek.

The best regulated hunting camp, where genial men meet annually to hunt, is Deerfoot Lodge, in the finest and most varied tract of forest that adorns the good state of Michigan. The 70,000 acres on which grow every kind of timber known to the northern woodsman is made up of hill and valley, lake and stream, swale and swamp. Grand pines, majestic hemlocks, sturdy elms, birches, beech and spruce, tower like giants while the modest fir and other thicket growths fill in. Cedar and tapering tamaracks cover the trackless swamps in which deer, wolves, bears, lynx and beaver seek homes and safety, making a dangerous but well supplied hunting ground for those who have the spirit, patience and endurance to enter in search of game.

All Deerfooters are skilled hunters, crack shots and charming men to meet. The Lodge is widely known and noted for the hospitality of the sterling men who own it and whose successful lives are models for young men, for they are earnest, upright, fearless, broad cultured, manly men whom it is an honor to know.

For several years the writer has been an inmate of Deerfoot during the hunting season and his esteem for the stalwart boss, the genial judge and the benign skipper who are the owners and presiding geniuses, is beyond a lingual picture.

The season of 1908 is memorable for the mild, foggy and rainy days which added to the hunters' work, but it was in nowise a deterrent. All hunted and all were satisfied, because sport and not slaughter, nor a bag reaching the law limit, is the object of any Deerfooter.

THE THREE HOSTS

Some time during 1886, a fawn, wabbly on his legs, stood beside his mother wondering at everything about him. Surely he was in the midst of strange surroundings and curious to make discoveries and know something of them. The watchful doe, alert and proud, as mothers are of their offspring, then and there began the education of the weak and wabbly creature which was to become the ruler of a domain, a czar brooking no rival, a mighty antagonist before whose onrushes all bucks learned to flee, and he trod the ways of "Black Wolf Swamp," the whelping place of the fierce gray wolf, with kingly majesty and the confidence gained in many successful battles.

It was when the first spikes grew that were the beginning of the grand crown of antlers, that adorned his head in later years, and made of his foes wounded wrecks or dead carcasses, that his fighting blood began to course through his veins. The first battle may have gone against him, but he never hesitated to engage in others, until he won all and then he had become a prince of the forest, wearing a crown of several spikes, eager to assert his power. Thus the early years of Broadhorns were passed. Each year the crown grew larger, his muscles were like spring steel, his sinews like tough brass, the bucks which dared to contest with him were few and soon put to rout. Then his royal spirit was in full sway. He had learned that the wolf pack might be evaded as he had often done by wading along the shore of Deerheart lake or down a running stream toward the desolate wolf hills, but there was an alert, persistent, a strange moving creature, who watched and waited and pursued him once each year. This creature was two-legged and carried something that spoke with a vicious crack and he had often heard the whiz of something that was spit out by this strange speaking thing as it came too close to be safe perhaps, and with a defiant snort he plunged into the almost impenetrable swamp to safety.

So he began making "Black Wolf Swamp" his dominion and fought and conquered all the bucks which were in it or after dared to venture. Here his harem was gathered. Here he was the unrelenting, unmerciful czar who ruled by right of might and with such forceful sway that two or three wolves dared not attack him and the wary pack were never able to gather upon him in force to pull him down. Broadhorns, whose crown of 22 points, whose undaunted courage, whose fierce battles and whose successions of victories, had made him a majestic creature and a hunter's most worthy trophy, was at the height of his power and grandeur.

At this period in the career of the czar he was sighted early in the morning on the slope of a hill near the edge of his great swampy empire, and with him a large beautiful doe. The distance was long, the czar was quick and before the gun could be raised, with a defiant snort he plunged into the thick swamp, where for the first time he was to engage in a duel resulting in his death.

"Black Wolf Swamp" rarely, if ever, entered by men before, was invaded by a new foe, whose patience, silent movements, unwearying step by step progress, excelled the fierce wolf or any enemy known to Broadhorns, and the battle royal for life was on. It was a long, weary day for the hunter and must have been for the hunted. Several times during that day of pursuit, of hide and seek, wary, valiant old Broadhorns gave evidence that he was aware of and alertly avoiding the relentless pursuer, by a sharp shrill snort with its note of surprise and defiance. Darkness fell and the hunter, weary but confident, worked his tedious way back to camp and the czar went browsing during the night as the hunter slept.

Long before rosy dawn began to drive black robed night away, the rested hunter was hurrying to reach the czar's domain to resume the duel begun the day before. As he came to the edge of the swamp, just as the light of day was breaking, Broadhorns gave a fierce snort of surprise and plunged recklessly in among the thick growth of cedars. The strange creature who had wearied him the day before had come back. He had come very close but a gust of wind betrayed him and gave the czar his chance to keep cover and flee. Now a royal crown was endangered, the glory of unopposed rule was to be preserved, but not in open fight, for the thing of vicious crack, that sent a whistling thing close and cut the bushes about him, was in sight borne by the two-legged foe.

That night after a superb dinner from a fine saddle of venison, the hunters of Deerfoot Lodge discussed Broadhorns and the conclusion was reached that pursuit by one would give the czar a weary day only, but if two worked this domain together his august royalty might become more weary, confusion result and a shot by one or the other end a long and rigorous rule in "Black Wolf Swamp," and win the grand crown the czar so proudly bore and defiantly shook at his pursuers from a safe distance. So it was arranged that the boss whose skill, experience, endurance and persistency had won many a trophy, should accompany Sunny Jim and give the plucky ruler of the great dark swamp the final battle of his long and turbulent life. It was not light enough to see each other ten feet apart when the two hunters reached the kingdom of Broadhorns next morning. Separating as they entered the dark and tangled jungle there began a silent, strenuous search for the wild prize. Steps were taken with such care and so slowly that not a twig cracked. Though not over 25 yards apart, the hunters were not in sight of each other during the tedious hours that passed. It was less than 40 minutes after entering the dark abode of Broadhorns that his sharp snort of defiance told the pursuers their presence was known. The hunt did not relax for an instant, for now the czar's many and devious runways were known so that he must keep moving, vigilant of ear, nostril and eye, or his reign would be ended. For the first time he was followed by a foe that could not be eluded, that was tireless, crafty and seemed to be in two places at once. The snorting on discovery of the pursuers was not as frequent as the day wore on. It had lost its defiant ring and became a note of fear, a feeling that since fawnhood had not been his. It was just as the sun was beginning to set that the czar, weary, filled with the terror of continued pursuit, his haughty spirit gone, made a dash through a thinner growth of thicket to reach a hitherto unnsed runway. The sharp eye of the boss saw a gleam and he fired. There was not time to sight the gun or bring it to shoulder. It was a snap shot, the first that had been fired at his royal highness during the three days of unremitted pursuit. It was the beginning of the end.

Next morning, the fourth day since Broadhorns was first sighted, all the hunters joined, satisfied that he had made his last run for life. It was half past eight when the judge, who had been following the course of the wounded animal, came to a point where the tracks showed he had made a desperate leap into the tangled brush. That it was the last effort of the mighty force that had dominated the dethroned monarch, his skill and knowledge of the game and hunting plainly told him. Following in the line of that last grand effort, he came almost face to face with the czar, who had left the runway with that 30-foot leap to lie down and face death alone and in concealment. As the judge broke through the thicket, Broadhorns, too weak from loss of blood to rise, turned his proud head toward the pursuer, gazed a moment at him and then collapsed. The ball had struck the quarter, cut an artery, splintered the bone and the czar died a comparatively painless death. His crown of horns with 22 points, a trophy worth the price paid in tired muscles and sustained pursuit, hundreds of dollars could not buy.

T. M. Rich Dead.

Died on the 24th ult., at his home in Covington, T. M. Rich. Mr. Rich was stricken with paralysis about 18 months ago, from which time until his death he was an invalid, and received the tenderest of care from his devoted family. Mr. Thomas M. Rich was born at Big Bone Boone county, May 9th, 1832, and was married to Miss Mary Ann Wolford on January 23d, 1854. To them were born 7 children, six of whom with their mother survive, and have the sympathy of a very large circle of friends. The interment took place at Highland cemetery.

Solon Stephens Passes Away.

Solon Stephens died at his home near Rabbit Hash, last Thursday morning, after a lingering and painful illness. He was a son of the late Richard Stephens, an old and prominent citizen of that part of the county. The funeral services of the estimable and lamented citizen was held at the East Bend Baptist church last Friday, after which the remains were interred in the cemetery at the Methodist church near by. Solon Stephens was born on a farm in the neighborhood, near where he died, on September 28th, 1840. He leaves a widow, one son, Richard T., and one daughter, Mrs. Charles Wilson, besides numerous friends and relatives who mourn his departure.

In this issue appears the announcement of Hon. E. E. Winn, of Gallatin county, for Commonwealth's Attorney in this judicial district. Mr. Winn is a good and ever loyal Democrat, a splendid fellow, a high toned gentleman and a capable lawyer. As little Gallatin county, always true to the Democratic party, has never had either a Circuit Judge or a Commonwealth's Attorney, while each of the other counties in this district have been honored in that direction, she thinks she is at least entitled to the office she is now asking for her favorite son. Gallatin's claim is not without merit, and all will concede that she is entitled to some political consideration along the line she is now asking for it. Although the county is small it fails to see the justice in being ignored entirely in matters political, when the material she presents is as good as that of other counties.

THE KALAMAZOO SILO.

The great modern method of storing and preserving green food throughout the year and especially during the winter season when green food is the most valuable and utilized to the greatest profit.

INVALUABLE to the FARM.

Saving more to live stock owners than any agency that can be employed on the farm. Those who have the Silo in use would not part with it for many times its cost.

Supplies Nutritious Green Food Throughout the Wintry Months

Saves Fifty Per Cent of the Feed.

A modern method of preserving the green food with all its nutrients and providing its being fed without waste.

The Silo built by the Kalamazoo Co is the best in use and is composed of seven kinds of wood. It is a large wooden tank that is designed to be filled with the green food in season, and being closed and air tight the food is preserved in its green state, moist and sweet. The Silo is so arranged that the feed can be taken from it without impairing the quality of the balance. The cost of the Silo is small considering its saving, and it has the earning capacity of any improvement on the farm 40 per cent of the nutrients of the corn plant is in the stalks, leaves and husks, and where siloed, stock consume all of it in preference to any other feed.

Estimates and full description furnished on application. Write us and we will call and see you, explaining the process—it will cost you nothing.

WHICH?

Which way do you skim your milk?
It is hard sometimes to realize just how great the loss of cream is with crocks and pans. Some people may not believe that a

U. S. CREAM SEPARATOR

skims enough closer than the old way to increase their butter yield one-fourth or more. But it does, and there's a plain reason for it. When you set milk the cream and skim milk are separated from one another by the force of gravity, but when you skim milk with a U. S. Separator centrifugal force, which is thousands of times stronger than gravity, does the separating. It squeezes out the last drop of cream. Cream is money—you can't afford to waste it. If you keep three or more cows, it will pay you to buy a U. S. Separator. Come in and look one over, anyway. They are sold by

STOMACH DISTRESS.

And all Misery from Indigestion Vanishes Five Minutes Later.

Every family here ought to keep some Diapepsin in the house, as any one of you may have an attack of Indigestion or Stomach trouble at any time, day or night.

This harmless preparation will digest anything you eat and overcome a sour stomach five minutes afterwards.

If your meals don't tempt you, or what little you do eat seems to fill you, or lays like a lump of lead in your stomach, or if you have heart burn, that is a sign of Indigestion.

Ask your Pharmacist for a 50 cent case of Pape's Diapepsin and take one triangule after supper tonight. There will be no sour risings, no belching of undigested food mixed with acid, no stomach gas or heartburn, fullness or heavy feeling in the stomach, Nausea, Debilitating Headaches, Dizziness or Intestinal griping. This will all go, and besides, there will be no sour food left over in the stomach to poison your breath with nauseous odors.

Pape's Diapepsin is a certain cure for all stomach misery, because it will take hold of your food and digest it just the same as if your stomach wasn't there.

Actual, prompt relief for all your stomach misery is at your Pharmacist, waiting for you.

These large 50-cent cases contain more than sufficient to cure a case of Dyspepsia or Indigestion.

EASY TO MIX THIS.

Simple Recipe for Kidney or Bladder Trouble or Rheumatism.

What will appear very interesting to many people here is the article taken from a New York daily paper, giving a simple prescription, which is said to be a positive remedy for backache or kidney or bladder derangement, if taken before the stage of Bright's disease:

Fluid Extract Dandelion, one-half ounce; Compound Kargon, one ounce; Compound Syrup Sarsaparilla, three ounces. Shake well in a bottle and take in teaspoonful doses after each meal and again at bedtime.

A well-known druggist here at home, when asked regarding this prescription, stated that the ingredients are all harmless, and can be obtained at a small cost from any good prescription pharmacy, or the mixture would be put up if asked to do so. He further stated that while this prescription is often prescribed in rheumatic afflictions with splendid results, he could see no reason why it would not be a splendid remedy for kidney and urinary troubles and backache as it has a peculiar action upon the kidney structure, cleansing these most important organs and helping them to sift and filter from the blood the foul acids and waste matter which cause sickness and suffering. Those of our readers who suffer can make no mistake in giving it a trial.

The Boone Literary Society dedicated Library Hall, last Friday evening, by giving an entertainment that was attended by a good sized and very appreciative audience. The two declamatory contests, the first participated in by four young ladies, and the second, by three young men, were highly entertaining, and the contestants acquitted themselves in a most creditable manner. The young ladies and their declamations were as follows: Miss Alice Carver—the last speech of Robert Emmet; Miss Laura Porter—the Dream of the two Roads; Miss Ruth Kelly—Toussaint L'Ouverture; Miss Mary Utz—Death Bed of Benedict Arnold. The young men were: Wilbur Kelly—Extract from a speech of Patrick Henry; Robert Gaines—Anglo Saxon Supremacy; Howard Huey—Kentucky. Rev. Carter, of Petersburg, officiated as judge, and awarded the honors to Miss Alice Carver, on the part of the young ladies, and to Howard Huey on the part of the young men. The above contests were followed by the very amusing comedy, "Tim Delano's Courtship," in which the caste of characters was as follows: A. B. Renaker—Tim Delano; Mrs. Nettie Hughes—Aunt Tabitha; Mrs. Hettie Renaker—Alice, Aunt Tabitha's niece; Garnett Huey—Rick; Aunt Tabitha's nephew; Mrs. M. L. Riddell—Hildegard, a colored servant. Each one of the characters was impersonated to perfection, but Mrs. M. L. Riddell, as Hildegard, colored servant, made the hit of the evening. Mr. and Mrs. Kirb Tanner, with organ and violin, and Mr. Albert Conner, with guitar, furnished first-class music for the occasion.

The society will give another entertainment about the last of the month.

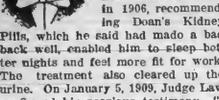
"THE MARRYING SQUIRE."



Justice George E. Law Has Broken All Records.

George E. Law, Justice of the Peace, 13½ Franklin St., Brazil, Ind., is known far and wide as the "Marrying Squire," from the fact that he has married more couples than any other official in Indiana. Judge Law wrote a letter in 1906, recommending Doan's Kidney Pills, which he said had made a bad back well, enabled him to sleep better nights and feel more fit for work. The treatment also cleared up the urine. On January 5, 1909, Judge Law confirmed his previous testimony. "I have recommended this remedy to many people since I first used it," said he.

HAD AWFUL WEEPING ECZEMA.

Face and Neck Were Raw—Terrible Itching, Inflammation and Soreness —All Treatments Failed.

Cuticura Proved a Great Success.

"Eczema began over the top of my ear. It cracked and then began to spread. I had three different doctors and tried several things, but they did me no good. At last one side of my face and my neck were raw. The water ran out of it so that I had to wear medicated cotton, and it was so inflamed and sore that I had to put a piece of cloth over my pillow to keep the water from it, and it would stain the cloth a sort of yellow. The eczema itched so that it seemed as though I could tear my face all to pieces. Then I began to use the Cuticura Soap and Ointment, and it was not more than three months before it was all healed up. Miss Ann Pearsons, Northfield, Vt., Dec. 19, 1907."

They Meant Business.

A Chicago stage manager was telling of amusing incidents of blunders and errors caused by stage fright. In a romantic play, recently revived, one of the minor characters, a dairy maid, comes forward at the end of a recital of a love romance, and comments as follows:

"Hope filled their youths and whetted their love; they plighted their troth!"

But at one of the performances the girl who played the dairy maid was absent without notice. At the last moment the manager gave the lines to a shepherdess, who had never had lines to speak before, and who was excessively nervous when her cue came. This is what the astonished audience heard:

"Hope filled their trough and blighted their love; they whetted their tooth!"

Argument That Won.

Susie had been promised a pair of new slippers for Sunday. Anxious to have them at once she had tried in every way to persuade her mother to buy them for her and let her wear them to a children's party that was to be given on Wednesday, but without success. Finally when both she and her mother had become tired of the teasing the little girl said: "Well, mamma, you needn't get them now; but maybe I'll be dead by Sunday and if I am you'll be sorry for disappointing me." Susie wore the slippers Wednesday.

NEW IDEA

Helped Wis. Couple.

It doesn't pay to stick too closely to old notions of things. New ideas often lead to better health, success and happiness.

A Wis. couple examined an idea new to them and stepped up several rounds on the health ladder. The husband writes:

"Several years ago we suffered from coffee drinking, were sleepless, nervous, sallow, weak and irritable. My wife and I both loved coffee and thought it was a bracer." (delusion.)

"Finally, after years of suffering, we read of Postum and the harmfulness of coffee, and believing that to grow we should give some attention to new ideas, we decided to test Postum.

"When we made it right we liked it and were relieved of ills caused by coffee. Our friends noticed the change —fresher skin, steadier nerves, better temper, etc.

"These changes were not sudden, but relief increased as we continued to drink and enjoy Postum, and we lost the desire for coffee.

"Many of our friends did not like Postum at first, because they did not make it right. But when they boiled Postum according to directions on pkg., until it was dark and rich, they liked it better than coffee and were benefited by the change." "There's a Reason."

A PERILOUS JOURNEY

Ezra the Scribe Goes Up to Jerusalem Without a Guard.

BY THE "HIGHWAY AND BYWAY" PREACHER

Scripture Authority—Book of Ezra, especially chapters 9 and 10.

The Book of Ezra.—The Book of Ezra is undoubtedly a continuation of the Book of Chronicles. It covers a period extending over seventy-nine years from 538 to 457 B. C. There are two main portions to the book. The first gives the return of the captives in the time of Cyrus, B. C. 536, and the rebuilding of the temple, interrupted by the Samaritans, but renewed at the preaching of Haggai and Zechariah. Some portions of this book are in Chaldee. The second part relates the second immigration of exiles in the reign of Artaxerxes Longimus, B. C. 457, with Ezra himself, and the institution of his great reform. Some credit Daniel with being the author of the first chapter. As regards Ezra 2 and as far as 3:1, it is found in the seventh chapter of Nehemiah, where many Biblical scholars hold it belongs. The next portion extends from 3:2 to the end of chapter 6. With the exception of one large explanatory addition by Ezra, extending from 4:6 to 23, this portion is the work of a writer contemporary with Zerubbabel and Joshua, and an eye witness of the rebuilding of the temple in the beginning of the reign of Darius Hystaspis. The last four chapters, beginning with chapter 7, are Ezra's own, and continue the history after a gap of fifty-eight years—from the sixth of Darius to the seventh of Artaxerxes.

SERMONETTE.

Be sure you are right and then go ahead, is an old adage which is full of profound truth. Note Ezra in the case before us. He has the king's decree authorizing his return to Jerusalem. He has the treasure which the king placed in his hands. He has a goodly company of people. Everything seems auspicious for the start.

But, be sure you are right before going ahead.

While in camp there at the river side, Ezra considers every detail of the expedition and thinks of the work which lies ahead of them when they have reached Jerusalem. The chief thought centered around the temple worship. Did he have those who, according to the law, were qualified for the priestly service? And again he looked over his company of followers. No sons of Levi there. Then how could the worship for the temple be carried on? And acting upon the thought he at once sent to certain who he felt ought to accompany them, and he was not disappointed, for "by the good hand of our God upon us they brought us a man of understanding, of the sons of Mahli, the son of Levi," etc.

But yet again Ezra would be sure he was right before pushing ahead on the journey. So he proclaims a fast and seeks God in prayer that he may know the right way. And he goes on to tell why he was not willing to trust to human means alone for guidance to Jerusalem.

"For I was ashamed to require of the king a band of soldiers and horsemen to help us against the enemy in the way; because we had spoken unto the king, saying: The hand of our God is upon all them for good that seek him; but his power and his wrath is against all them that forsake him."

That is, Ezra had made a profession of faith before the king which he was going to live up to. But not in any reckless spirit by which he threw all the burden of protection upon God.

He was going to "trust God and keep his powder dry."

And so there by the river he waited until the way had been made plain and he was certain that God was leading the way. Then he knew that he was not making any mistake. He was sure he was right and he was ready to go forward. This is a beautiful picture of a combination of sublime faith and a hard-headed common sense. It is not faith that casts reason aside. And human reason is not safe that trusts not to the higher leading of God's spirit. We need both.

THE STORY.

THOSE had been busy days for Ezra the scribe. The king's decree was in his hands granting him permission to return to Jerusalem and to take with him such treasure and people as he could collect, and he set eagerly to work sending word into all places where the Hebrews dwelt, asking them to go with him to Jerusalem.

He recalled his disappointment years before when he had been prevented from going up to Jerusalem.

"But God knew best," he exclaimed, fervidly. "For had I gone up then I should have gone up alone, but now I go up with much people and great treasure."

On the appointed day he went to the place by the River Ahava, whither he had told the people to come, and was surprised and delighted to see the goodly company which had gathered, all eager and expectant for the journey which lay ahead of them.

"When shall we start?" "Cannot we start to-morrow morning?" "Let us not waste any time, but start at once," were the words he heard on ever side.

"But are all here who should return with us?" Ezra questioned.

"Well, surely all are here who have shown any interest in your summons and who are disposed to come," was the reply.

But not content with this Ezra took a poll of the people in camp and found that not any of the tribe of Levi were present.

"We must have with us those who can minister the priestly functions," Ezra explained, as he sent messengers in search of such, and noted the impatient expressions of the gathered people.

"What did such a little detail as that amount to," they demanded. "If we are to get to Jerusalem we must get started."

"Yea, but we must be certain we are starting right, if we would have God with us," declared Ezra.

So they waited another night and the next morning the messengers came back with those upon whose hearts God had moved.

"Well, now we are surely ready to start," exclaimed the people, as the new arrivals from the tribe of Levi took their place in the camp. "We can get off to-day."

"Nay, but let us not be in too great haste. Have we sought God in this matter?" asked Ezra, and carrying out the idea expressed in his words he proclaimed a fast.

"For," he explained to the people, "we need to have God point out the way."

"But we will have the king's soldiers to guide us, will we not?" exclaimed the people.

Ezra did not reply for some minutes. Here was going to be the real struggle. Would the people look at the matter as did he?

"I am ashamed to require of the king a band of soldiers," he said, with quiet earnestness, "and horsemen to help us against the enemy in the way. I know he would be willing to send such to help us, but I have already spoken to the king, saying: 'The hand of our God is upon all them for good that seek him; but his power and his wrath is against all them that forsake him.'" And should I ask of the king horsemen and soldiers he would think that we did not trust our God."

The people were silent, but it was evident to see by their subdued looks that a growing sympathy was taking possession of their hearts and conquering the impatient spirit which was clamoring for an immediate advance.

So there at the River Ahava the people and Ezra the scribe fasted and prayed, and in a night vision as Ezra prayed out underneath the stars there came to him the assurance from God that he would lead them if they would but trust him fully and strive each one to do his will.

"But how shall I inspire the people with the same confidence?" exclaimed Ezra, half to himself and half in the entreaty of prayer.

"Twelve of the chief of the priests shall bear with you the burden of this leadership," spoke a voice. "Place with each a portion of the sacred vessels of the temple and of the gold and silver, and all will be well."

The voice ceased and Ezra knew that the way lay plain before him and that God was waiting to lead the way across the wild stretches of wilderness and desert, where lurked the robber bands.

"We have nothing to fear now, for God is surely leading the way," he exclaimed to the people as they gathered before him the next day, and he prepared to carry out the instructions of the Lord in dividing the treasure among the priests and making each responsible for his portion.

So the journey was begun, and their going without guard created no small stir in Babylon, and many were the dire predictions as to what would happen to the defenseless caravan as it passed through the wilderness regions. But Ezra maintained that God would guide and care for them and thus quieted the fears of the more timid.

On the night of the day on which the caravan started on its long journey a mysterious figure slipped out of the city of Babylon and made his way swiftly along the way which the caravan had taken. He knew that because of the women and little ones in the company he would be able to overtake the caravan before the daylight came.

"It is a trick," he muttered to himself as he sped on. "They are not traveling without guard. It is done to trap our band. But we shall see."

Two days later he joined his companions in their wilderness retreat and made his report, for he had been stationed in Babylon to spy on caravans leaving the city to learn their strength and the value of the treasure they carried.

"This is a company of Jews who are on their way back to Jerusalem. They carry much treasure for their temple there, and they seem to be traveling without any guard whatsoever, save as they talk about a certain Jehovah who is with them to deliver them."

"It is a trick," exclaimed the leader of the band, "to trap us."

"Just the very words I used," replied the returned spy. "No caravan would travel with the confidence of this company of Jews which was not securely protected. But it is certainly a mystery to know where their strength lies."

"We will take no chances," exclaimed the leader, with decision. "Let them pass."

And so it came to pass that Ezra and the company with him, together with the treasure they carried, reached Jerusalem in safety.

TAFT LEANS ON KNOX

HAS BROKEN FAITH

CAUSE FOR ROOSEVELT'S UNPOPULARITY IN THE WEST.

Voted for as Tariff Reformer, His Seven Years in the White House Have Been Productive of Monopolies.

The growing, working west, which welcomed Theodore Roosevelt four years ago with open arms, is severe in disapproval of him to-day.

The west voted for him because he had been an active supporter of tariff revision, believing that he would smite all those eastern tariff barons who fatten on western industry and thrift.

Mr. Roosevelt was not merely a tariff revisionist—he was a vehement free trader. He went further in his tirades against tariff robbery than such Democrats as "Horizontal Bill" Morrison himself. Mr. Roosevelt was a member of the New York Free Trade club.

May 29, 1884, the Free Trade club delegated a committee to attend the Republican convention in Chicago June 3 and demand that the national platform declare for reduction of taxation to necessities of government, for free raw materials and for a lower tariff that should not tax unfinished goods more than finished products.

Theodore Roosevelt headed that committee, yet during the seven years that Mr. Roosevelt has been in the White House his rich eastern friends have plundered the toiling west as never before. Tariff barons have literally wallowed in wealth created here in the west during the reign of Roosevelt.

Mr. Roosevelt has flooded congress with an infinite variety of tiresome messages on divers subjects, but not one word has he uttered of tariff reform, not one shot has he taken at that brood of New Jersey trusts that roost almost under the eaves of the White House.

The west, which is not often fooled by bombast or fustian, naturally regards Mr. Roosevelt's studied inaction as a breach of faith, and in the west breach of faith is not a small offense. —Chicago Journal.

In Battle for Liberty of Press.

Few newspapers are very rich or very prosperous. Few of them are financially able to cope with the tremendous resources of the United States government wielded by an unscrupulous president. The legal expenses which the World—the only Democratic newspaper in New York—will have to incur in resisting Mr. Roosevelt's assault upon the liberty of the press would wreck an ordinary newspaper. The success of this prosecution would place practically every American newspaper at his mercy, or at the mercy of any president who might feel aggrieved by political criticism and be willing to abuse his official power in seeking personal revenge.

There has been nothing like it in the history of the United States, and in resisting to the utmost the usurpation of Theodore Roosevelt the World is fighting the battle of every other newspaper in the country.—N. Y. World.

A Misfit.

A late writer declares Roosevelt is a combination of Washington, Lincoln, Napoleon and St. George. Evidently that article has been traveling around the magazine offices for some months and was carelessly printed before bringing it up to date. A man like Washington who makes statements to congress "without a basis of truth?" A man like Lincoln who is without the strength to stand apart from mere thieves? Like Napoleon who only rode up San Juan after the enemy had disappeared? Like St. George, who quails before every little worm of political pull and tries to placate every influence in the land?—Florida Times-Union.

It seems that many of those large orders placed in October, subject to cancelation in the event of Mr. Bryan's election, were canceled, anyhow.

THE TASK FOR DEMOCRACY.

Opportunity at Hand to Do Great Service to Country.

The split in the Republican membership of the house committee on ways and means, with the high tariff men in the minority, is only one of the many divisions that are going to come in the Republican party before the new congress is many months old.

The Republican financial policy of high, revenue-killing tariff and recklessly extravagant appropriations has broken down. Any party to which this happens is in danger of defeat. The country faces a condition in which hurrah talk about the blessings bestowed by the Republican party will not satisfy its needs.

Practical measures of relief are imperatively called for, and upon these the Republican majority in the congress will not be united. Either there must be a sharp cutting down of appropriations, or more revenue must be raised from sources that will not be oppressively felt by the taxpayers. The proposed resort to war taxes in time of peace will defeat any party that makes it.

In the new congress the Democratic policies of revenue tariff and government economically administered will come to the front in more favorable light than they have appeared in since the panic of 1873 overthrew the Republican control of the house.

The adversity of the Republican party at the present moment makes the opportunity for the Democratic party. The party will do a service to the country by going into the new congress standing firmly upon every proven Democratic principle. It has a rare chance to win popular gratitude and control of the Sixty-second congress by doing its full duty intelligently and faithfully.

"ON WHAT MEAT," ETC.

President Roosevelt's Words Are Those of One Born to Autocracy.

Not until a little more than a month before the expiration of his term did a certain president of the United States disclose to congress, in a special message, this amazing view of the proper functions of his office:

"All it (the administration) has done or attempted has been in the single consistent effort to secure and enlarge the rights and opportunities of the men and women of the United States."

"We are trying to conserve what is good in our social system, and we are striving toward this end when we endeavor to do away with what is bad."

"Success may be made too hard for some if it is made too easy for others."

"Our aim is, so far as is possible, to provide such conditions that there shall be equality of opportunity where there is equality of energy, fidelity and intelligence."

A hundred years hence it is possible that historians may assume that the foregoing declaration was entirely sincere, and that altruistic and reformatory zeal rather than the service and glorification of self was the mainspring of Mr. Roosevelt's executive activities during seven years. However that may be, certain it is that these same historians will be searching the documents of heredity, environment and pathology to ascertain how this astonishing man ever came to believe that it was his function as president to "enlarge" the rights and opportunities of the men and women of the United States. Or that it was his duty as president to conserve part and destroy part of the existing "social system," according to his personal judgment of what was good and what was bad in that system. Or, again, that it was the duty and function of his administration to "provide conditions," social, economical, or in any other sense save that which the constitution intended when it defined his duties and prescribed his oath of office.

If rules are adopted to prevent the senators from saying unpleasant things about the White House, perhaps it would be only fair to have others to prevent the White House from saying unpleasant things about the senators.

Louisville, Ky.—A. Scott Bullitt, a local attorney, secured a temporary injunction restraining the general council from passing an amended building ordinance allowing the construction of the Gaiety theater, in which Rudolph Hynicka, of Cincinnati, is interested.

Henderson, Ky.—Articles of incorporation were filed in the clerk's office here by the Southern Coal and Transportation Co. of West Virginia. The amount of the capital stock is $500,000, and is divided into 5,000 shares, par value of $100 each.

Lexington, Ky.—Robert A. Downing, senior member of the Purnell-Downing Drug Co., was stricken with paralysis in his bath-tub at his home here.

Augusta, Ky.—The heaviest rain for years fell in this section, doing great damage all over the county. A fifty-foot iron bridge was washed away on Camp creek.

Elizabethtown, Ky.—The Kentucky State Farmers' institute convened in this city with a large attendance. H. M. Froman, of Ghent, presided. Col. H. A. Sommers made the welcome address.

Versailles, Ky.—As a result of a heavy rain the dam of the new lake built by the Fox Spring Lake Co., four miles from Versailles, gave way and the water swept out, flooding the country below.

Louisville, Ky.—Ten athletes from the Louisville manual training high school will take part in the athletic and indoor track meet of the Celts' Athletic club, of Cincinnati, on March 20.

Paducah, Ky.—A cloudburst seemingly emptied its entire contents in McCracken county, and approximately did $40,000 worth of damage. McCracken county roads, said to be the most durable in the state, are damaged at least $15,000.

Lexington, Ky.—With a sale of his household goods and farming implements, Edward Corrigan, noted turf man, closed out his holdings in Kentucky, with the exception of the thoroughbred stallion, Imported Marta Santa, and 12 brood mares.

Russellville, Ky.—Prof. B. E. Atkins, president of Logan college for the past seven years, one of the most successful and prominent educators of the south, died suddenly of acute heart asthma, aged 81. He leaves a wife, two daughters and two sons.

Louisville, Ky.—Kentucky republicans left here to attend the inauguration of President Taft, on a special train known as the "Bradley Special." The Kentucky Republican club of Washington has made every provision for their comfort and convenience.

London, Ky.—Sherman Blanton, Nathan Blanton, Jack Blanton and Pearl Blanton were brought here for trial for the killing of F. R. Blanton, near Layman, Harlan county. Because the defendants are extensively related in Harlan county the case was transferred to London.

Hopkinsville, Ky.—General Manager Ewing, of the Planters' Protective association, called off the sale of nearly 2,000,000 pounds of tobacco on the ground that it conflicted in grade with the 1907 tobacco held unsold at this place. The executive committee later rescinded this order and granted the farmers the privilege of selling their pool of 2,000,000 pounds of tobacco, provided low lugs are sold to stemmers, and do not conflict with the unsold 1907 crop. Resolutions were passed forbidding any more tobacco to be sold loose when present deals are completed.

Madisonville, Ky.—B. L. Teague, colored, of this city, has been appointed rural route carrier out of Madisonville on route No. 4, with Floyd Grace, another colored man, as substitute. The announcement of these appointments has caused considerable comment, and it is the general opinion that a petition will be sent the postmaster general to rescind the appointments. There are over one hundred families on this route, all white but three, and the appointment of these colored men is not at all satisfactory, and it is reported that they will remove their boxes if these men are to remain as carriers.

Owensboro, Ky.—J. A. Harris, one of the most prominent insurance and real estate men in Owensboro, was arrested on the charge of setting fire to and attempting to burn his storehouse in this city on February 13. Lloyd P. Bennett, a former Deputy United States Marshal in Western Kentucky and brother of Senator Alvis Bennett, of Ohio county, was also arrested, he being charged with being an accessory after the fact. Harris is prominent in church affairs. He was formerly connected with the real estate department of the defunct Daviess County bank and was also superintendent of the Homestead Land Co., one of James H. Parrish's concerns. He came here from Louisville a number of years ago.

Louisville, Ky.—W. R. Moorman, democrat, was defeated for re-election as a member of the state board of agriculture, forestry and immigration by H. M. Beard, republican. It is said suit may be filed to show Beard's election was a result of irregularities.

Glasgow, Ky.—Articles of incorporation have been filed by the "Planters' Loose Leaf Tobacco Warehouse Co.," with a capital stock of $25,000. A large lot has already been purchased and the erection of a large warehouse will begin at once.

HAD THE "SAND" THAT WINS.

Inventor's Splendid Fight for Patent Unjustly Denied Him.

Charles Goodyear is not the only inventor who might turn his face to the wall to die saying of the tardy recognition of his efforts: "I die happy—others can get rich."

Goodyear's efforts to introduce the use of vulcanized rubber were no more tragic than the stories of a dozen other inventors. There was a man named Simpson in Missouri who discovered that gutta-percha was a non-conductor of electricity. He borrowed money of one Amos Kendall to make his application for a patent. It was rejected over and over, rich telegraph companies fighting his claim. But he had "sand;" he never weakened. It was just after the civil war that he made his last fight. He had no money—not a dollar—but he started from St. Louis for Washington afoot.

He would not beg, but made his way half across the continent by sawing wood, hoeing corn, or doing any work that came to hand. In one place he robbed a scarecrow of a pair of pants and a hat, leaving his own more ragged garments in their place. In Pittsburg he had to work as a truck driver till he could earn enough to repair his shoes and take him on his way. And all the time he believed stubbornly in himself and his invention. His own words were:

"When I came over the tops of the Alleghanies I saw the sun rising, and I knelt down and thanked God for my life and asked him to let me get my patent. He promised me on the spot, and I never had a moment's doubt after that."

Arriving in Washington, he got a living as a day laborer on the stone foundations of the patent office, and from that vantage ground he fought his claim through the office and the courts, and got his patent. The Western Union Telegraph Company gave him $100,000 down for the privilege of using it.

The Test of True Love.

"Alicia," cried the ardent lover, burning with the flame of a hot, rapturous passion, "will you marry me? For your dear sake would I brave the perils of both fire and water, the anger of the elements! Say but the word!"

"I can not, Arthur!" replied the maid.

"Say not so, faireat one! Over hot plowshares would I walk for you, plunge down precipitous chasms into the very jaws of death! Be mine!"

"Arthur. I can not!"

"Ah, cruel maid! Cast me beneath the feet of wild horses, throw me to the wild beasts for food—all these things will I suffer gladly for your sake!"

"And still I can not, Arthur!"

"But, really, Alicia," cried the young man—"now, really! Look here. I'll sell my dog, and buy you a Sunday hat, if you'll walk out with me—there!"

"Arthur," replied the maiden, kissing him affectionately on the brow, and linking her arm in his, "let us go out and sell the dog!"

Overheard at the Zoo.

"How long have you had a sore throat?" asked Dr. Monk, who had been summoned to treat the suffering giraffe.

"Oh, I have had 'em four feet long, doctor," replied the patient, "but I guess from the feel of it this beats the record by at least six inches."—Judge.

Just a Guess.

"What did the poet mean by 'the call of incense-breathing morn?'"

"I guess he must have meant that they were having sausage and buckwheat cakes for breakfast."—Chicago Record-Herald.

Her Cake.

"Here are some dead flies in you, cake, dear."

"Is that so? Wonder how in the world they got in it?"

"I don't know, dear, but I can guess what killed 'em."—Yonkers Statesman.

Says Country People Should Know of This

A New Drug Compound Which Relieves Constipation and Purifies the System.

It seems certain that the farming class of people will be free from many of the common ills heretofore affecting them as the new drug compound called cascaroyal pills is far more effective and a hundred times cheaper than the table and mineral waters used by the rich. In fact one of these little cascaroyal pills (Blackburn's) is far more effective as a mild blood cleansing physic than a whole bottle of some vile salts or mineral waters and the action is pleasurable, not drastic. This cascaroyal pill does not cause the usual griping, straining and pain which accompany the action of cathartic pills and mineral waters. It is just a new scientific drug compound made from castor oil, cascara, wild lemon, black cherry, sulphur, etc., but being made in large quantities by the Blackburn Products Co., Dept. K., of Dayton, Ohio, it is sold in packages of 15 for 10 cents or 45 for 25 cents, and any druggist can supply the reader. The above firm will gladly send a free package to any one who writes for it. If the reader wants the experience of a pleasurable physic, tonic and blood purifier, write for the free package today.

At this meeting all the stockholders and every person interested are requested to be present.

By keeping our ears open we learned something of how the big dinners given by the I. D. C. (Idlewild Dining Club) are conducted. They are held behind locked doors, as at Fletcher Clore's, last Thursday. They have a password and doorkeeper. At the close of each dining the password is changed and a doorkeeper appointed for the next dining. No member is admitted who cannot give the password. Any member not at the last dining may be given the password by any member that was; if it is done before arriving at the place of dining. When Mr. and Mrs. N. S. Walton went to Mr. Clore's last Thursday, they didn't know the password, as they were not at the last dining, but thought they would meet with some brother or sister that could post them, but failing to meet any one Mr. Walton said to doorkeeper T. G. Willis, "we haven't the password and knowing the rules we will return home. We are sorry Bro. Willis, for we are hungry." "Hungry is the word, walk in brother and sister," said Mr. Willis. But for Mr. Walton accidentally and unknowingly speaking the password, it would have been Katy bar the door.

IN MEMORY OF MRS. SUSAN ACRA.

After a long and trying illness, she passed from this life to the beyond, on January 30, 1909, at the home of her daughter, Mrs. Agnes Clore, surrounded by her loving children, who did everything possible for her comfort. She was the widow of the late Madison Acra, who preceded her to the grave in 1877. Her's was indeed a beautiful character, from a young girl she loved the church and the Lord's work, which led her to become a christian early and joined the Methodist church. Though called into that higher service at the age of 92 years, her life had proven a potent factor for good, and its influence for righteousness in the future is incalculable. Her life was characterized by zeal in the Master's service and a broad charity; by devotion to her home and loved ones and an abiding faith which remained unshaken to the end, enabling her, though thoroly aware of her condition, to meet death with resignation and fearlessness. Her remains were followed by a host of relatives and friends to pay the last tribute of respect, after a song and prayer the mortal remains of a dear mother, were consigned to their last resting place on earth. She leaves three daughters and two sons to mourn the loss of a mother.

RATHER PAY THAN SERVE.

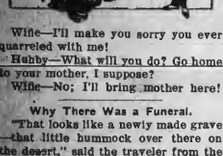
Citizen Soldier's Unique Idea of the Duties of a Sentry.

Australians still tell stories of the C. L. V.'s, although the war is a far memory. One, a member of the Stock Exchange, was left one wet and miserable night to guard a wagonload of goods.

He shivered in the unsheltered place for some hours pondering many things, and then a bright thought struck him just as the colonel came around on his tour of inspection.

"Colonel," he asked, "how much is this wagon worth?"

"I don't know," was the answer. "Much or little, we can't afford to lose it."



"Well, but colonel," persisted the amateur soldier, "you might give me a rough idea of the value."

"About £200," said the Colonel testily.

"Very well," was the answer. "I will come down to the camp and give you a check for the amount. Then I'll turn in. I wouldn't catch my death of cold for twice that much."

What the colonel said is not recorded.—Melbourne Times.

MADE HIM SIT UP.

Wife—I'll make you sorry you ever quarreled with me!

Hubby—What will you do? Go home to your mother, I suppose?

Wife—No; I'll bring mother here!

Why There Was a Funeral.

"That looks like a newly made grave—that little hummock over there on the desert," said the traveler from the east.

"That's just what it is, neighbor," answered Arizona Al. "The editor of the Weekly Cactus Spine was buried over there last week."

"What was his complaint?"

"He didn't have none. It was Coyote Cal that had the complaint. You see, there was a hahy born up to Cal's house a spell ago, and the editor wrote an item about it, sayin' a tow-headed little girl hed come to make Cal and his woman happy, hut it 'pears that the printer got the letters mixed somehow. Leastways it said in the paper when Cal read it that it was a two-headed hahy, and him bein' an impulsive cuss, there wan't nothin' to do but hold the funeral the next day hut one."

CONGENIAL WORK
And Strength to Perform It.

A person in good health is likely to have a genial disposition, ambition, and enjoy work.

On the other hand, if the digestive organs have been upset by wrong food, work becomes drudgery.

"Until recently," writes a Washington girl; "I was a railroad stenographer, which means full work every day.

"Like many other girls alone in a large city, I lived at a boarding house. For breakfast it was mush, greasy meat, soggy cakes, black coffee, etc.

"After a few months of this diet I used to feel sleepy and heavy in the mornings. My work seemed a terrible effort, and I thought the work was to blame—too arduous.

"At home I had heard my father speak of a young fellow who went long distances in the cold on Grape-Nuts and cream and nothing more for breakfast.

"I concluded if it would tide him over a morning's heavy work, it might help me, so on my way home one night I bought a package and next morning I had Grape-Nuts and milk for breakfast.

"I stuck to Grape-Nuts, and in less than two weeks I noticed improvement. I can't just tell how well I felt, but I remember I used to walk the 12 blocks to business and knew how good it was simply to live.

"As to my work—well, did you ever feel the delight of having congenial work and the strength to perform it? That's how I felt. I truly believe a life and vigor in every grain of [illegible]te."

PRESIDENT TAFT'S STRONG ADDRESS

INAUGURAL DELIVERED BY NATION'S NEW CHIEF EXECUTIVE.

EXTRA SESSION IS PROMISED

Congress Will Meet March 15 to Take Up Tariff Revision—Adequate Army and Navy Urged—Panama Canal Heartily Approved—Southern Race Problem and Labor Legislation Discussed.

Washington, Mar. 4. — President Taft, having been sworn in as chief executive of the nation, delivered an inaugural address that was listened to with great interest. In part it was as follows:

My Fellow Citizens: Any one who takes the oath I have just taken must feel a heavy weight of responsibility. If not, he has no conception of the powers and duties of the office upon which he is about to enter, or he is lacking in a proper sense of the obligation which the oath imposes.

The office of an inaugural address is to give a summary outline of the main policies of the new administration, so far as they can be anticipated. I have had the honor to be one of the advisers of my distinguished predecessor, and as such, to hold up his hands in the reforms he has initiated. I should be untrue to myself, to my promises and to the declaration of the party platform upon which I am elected to office, if I did not make the maintenance and enforcement of those reforms a most important feature of my administration. They were directed to the suppression of the lawlessness and abuses of power of the great combinations of capital invested in railroads and in industrial enterprises carrying on interstate commerce. The steps which my predecessor took and the legislation passed on his recommendation have accomplished much, have caused a general halt in the vicious policies which created popular alarm, and have brought about in the business affected a much higher regard for existing law.

More Legislation Needed.

To render the reforms lasting, however, and to secure at the same time freedom from alarm on the part of those pursuing proper and progressive business methods, further legislative and executive action are needed. Relief of the railroads from certain restrictions of the anti-trust law has been urged by my predecessor and will be urged by me. On the other hand, the administration is pledged to legislation looking to a proper federal supervision and restriction to prevent excessive issues of bonds and stocks by companies owning and operating interstate commerce railroads.

Then, too, a reorganization of the department of justice, of the bureau of corporations in the department of commerce and labor, and of the interstate commerce commission, looking to effective co-operation of these agencies, is needed to secure a more rapid and certain enforcement of the laws affecting interstate railroads and industrial combinations.

I hope to be able to submit at the first regular session of the incoming congress, in December next, definite suggestions in respect to the needed amendments to the anti-trust and the interstate commerce laws, and the changes required in the executive departments concerned in their enforcement.

Promises Extra Session.

A matter of most pressing importance is the revision of the tariff. In accordance with the promises of the platform upon which I was elected, I shall call congress into extra session, to meet on the fifteenth day of March, in order that consideration may be at once given to a bill revising the Dingley act. This should secure an adequate revenue and adjust the duties in such a manner as to afford to labor and to all industries in this country, whether of the farm, mine or factory, protection by tariff equal to the difference between the cost of production abroad and the cost of production here, and have a provision which shall put into force, upon executive determination of certain facts, a higher or maximum tariff against those countries whose trade policy toward us equitably requires such discrimination. It is thought that there has been such a change in conditions since the enactment of the Dingley act, drafted on a similarly protective principle, that the measure of the tariff above stated will permit the reduction of rates in certain schedules and will require the advancement of few, if any.

Money Needed for Big Projects.

The putting into force of laws which shall secure the conservation of our resources, so far as they may be within the jurisdiction of the federal government, including the most important work of saving and restoring our forests, and the general improvement of waterways, are all proper government functions which must involve large expenditure if properly performed. While some of them, like the reclamation of arid lands, are made to pay for themselves, others are of such an indirect benefit that this cannot be expected of them. A permanent improvement, like the Panama canal, should be treated as a distinct enterprise, and should be paid for by the proceeds of bonds, the issue of which will distribute its cost between the present and future generations in accordance with the benefits derived. It may well be submitted to the serious consideration of congress whether the deepening and control of the channel of a great river system, like that of the Ohio or of the Mississippi, when definite and practical plans for the enterprise have been approved and determined upon, should not be provided for in the same way.

For Army and Navy.

Then, too, there are expenditures of government absolutely necessary if our country is to maintain its proper place among the nations of the world, and is to exercise its proper influence in defense of its own trade interests, in the maintenance of traditional American policy against the colonization of European monarchies in this hemisphere, and in the promotion of peace and international morality. I refer to the cost of maintaining a proper army, a proper navy and suitable fortifications upon the mainland of the United States and in its dependencies.

We should have an army so organized, and so officered, as to be capable in time of emergency in co-operation with the national militia, and under the provisions of a proper national volunteer law, rapidly to expand into a force sufficient to resist all probable invasion from abroad and to furnish a respectable expeditionary force, if necessary, in the maintenance of our traditional American policy which bears the name of President Monroe.

Our fortifications are yet in a state of only partial completeness and the number of men to man them is insufficient. What has been said of the army may be affirmed in even a more emphatic way of the navy. A modern navy cannot be improvised. It must be built and in existence when the emergency arises which calls for its use and operation.

Asiatic Immigration.

The admission of Asiatic immigrants who cannot be amalgamated with our population has been made the subject either of prohibitory clauses in our treaties and statutes, or of strict administrative regulation secured by diplomatic negotiation. I sincerely hope that we may continue to minimize the evils likely to arise from such immigration without unnecessary friction and by mutual concessions between self-respecting governments. Meantime, we must take every precaution to prevent, or, failing that, to punish outbursts of race feeling among our people against foreigners of whatever nationality who have by our grant a treaty right to pursue lawful business here and to be protected against lawless assault or injury.

This leads me to point out a serious defect in the present federal jurisdiction which ought to be remedied at once. Having assured to other countries by treaty the protection of our laws for such of their subjects or citizens as we permit to come within our jurisdiction, we now leave to a state or a city, not under the control of the federal government, a duty of performing our international obligations in this respect. By proper legislation we may, and ought to, place in the hands of the federal executive the means of enforcing the treaty rights of such aliens in the courts of the federal government. It puts our government in a pusillanimous position to make definite engagements to protect aliens and then to excuse the failure to perform those engagemnts by an explanation that the duty to keep them is in states or cities, not within our control.

Monetary Laws Need Change.

One of the reforms to be carried out during the incoming administration is a change of our monetary and banking laws, so as to secure greater elasticity in the forms of currency available for trade, and to prevent the limitations of law from operating to increase the embarrassments of a financial panic. The monetary commission lately appointed is giving full consideration to existing conditions and to all proposed remedies, and will doubtless suggest one that will meet the requirements of business and of public interest. We may hope that the report will embody neither the narrow view of those who believe that the sole purpose of the new system should be to secure a large return on banking capital or of those who would have greater expansion of currency with little regard to provisions for its immediate redemption or ultimate security. There is no subject of economic discussion so intricate and so likely to evoke different views and dogmatic statements as this one. The commission in studying the general influence of currency on business and of business on currency, have wisely extended their investigation in European banking and monetary methods.

The incoming congress should promptly fulfill the promise of the Republican platform and pass a proper postal savings bank bill. It will not be unwise or excessive paternalism. The promise to repay by the government will furnish an inducement to savings deposits which private enterprise cannot supply, and at such a low rate of interest as not to withdraw custom from existing banks. It will substantially increase the funds available for investment as capital in useful enterprises. It will furnish the absolute security which makes the proposed scheme of government guaranty of deposits so alluring without its pernicious results.

Panama Canal All Right.

The Panama canal will have a most important hearing upon the trade between the eastern and the far western sections of our country, and will greatly increase the facilities for transportation between the eastern and western seaboard, and may possibly revolutionize the transcontinental rates with respect to bulky merchandise. It will also have a most beneficial effect to increase the trade between the eastern seaboard of the United States and the western coast of South America, and, indeed, with some of the important ports on the east coast of South America reached by rail from the west coast. The work on the canal is making most satisfactory progress. The type of the canal as a lock canal was fixed by congress after a full consideration of the conflicting reports of the majority and minority of the consulting board, and after the recommendation of the war department and the executive upon those reports. Recent suggestion that something had occurred on the isthmus to make the lock type of the canal less feasible than it was supposed to be when the reports were made and the policy determined on, led to a visit to the isthmus of a board of competent engineers to examine the Gatun dam and locks which are the key of the lock type. The report of that board shows that nothing has occurred in the nature of newly revealed evidence which should change the views once formed in the original discussion. The construction will go on under a most effective organization controlled by Col. Goethals and his fellow army engineers associated with him, and will certainly be completed early in the next administration, if not before.

South and the Negroes.

I look forward with hope to increasing the already good feeling between the south and the other sections of the country. My chief purpose is not to effect a change in the electoral vote of the southern states. That is a secondary consideration. What I look forward to is an increase in the tolerance of political viewsof all kinds and their advocacy throughout the south, and the existence of a respectable political opposition in every state; even more than this, to an increased feeling on the part of all the people in the south that this government is their government, and that its officers in their states are their officers.

The consideration of this question cannot, however, be complete and full without reference to the negro race, its progress and its present condition. The 13th amendment secured them freedom; the 14th amendment due process of law, protection of property and the pursuit of happiness; and the 15th amendment attempted to secure the negro against any deprivation of the privilege to vote, because he was a negro. The 13th and 14th amendments have been generally enforced and have secured the objects for which they were intended. While the 15th amendment has not been generally observed in the past it ought to be observed, and the tendency of southern legislation to-day is toward the enactment of electoral qualifications which shall square with that amendment.

Laws for Labor's Benefit.

There is one other matter to which I shall refer. It was made the subject of great controversy during the election and calls for at least a passing reference now. My distinguished predecessor has given much attention to the cause of labor, with whose struggle for better things he has shown the sincerest sympathy. At his instance, congress has passed the bill fixing the liability of interstate carriers to their employes for injury sustained in the course of employment, abolishing the rule of fellow-servant and the common law rule as to contributory negligence. It has also passed a law fixing the compensation of government employes for injuries sustained in the employ of the government through the negligence of the superior. It also passed a model child labor law for the District of Columbia. In previous administrations an arbitrary law for interstate commerce railroads and their employes, and laws for the application of safety devices to save the lives and limbs of employes of interstate railroads had been passed. Additional legislation of this kind was passed by the outgoing congress.

I wish to say that in so far as I can, I hope to promote the enactment of further legislation of this character. I am strongly convinced that the government should make itself as responsible to employes injured in its employ as an interstate railway corporation is made responsible by federal law to its employes.

Injunctions in Labor Disputes.

Another labor question has arisen which has awakened the most excited discussion. That is in respect to the power of the federal courts to issue injunctions in industrial disputes. As to that, my convictions are fixed. Take away from the courts, if it could be taken away, the power to issue injunctions in labor disputes, and it would create a privileged class among the laborers and save the lawless among their number from a most needful remedy available to all men for the protection of their business against lawless invasion. The proposition that business is not a property or pecuniary right which can be protected by equitable injunction is utterly without foundation in precedent or reason. The proposition is usually linked with one to make the secondary boycott lawful. Such a proposition is at variance with the American instinct and will find no support in my judgment when submitted to the American people. The secondary boycott is an instrument of tyranny, and ought not to be made legitimate.

The issuing of a temporary restraining order without notice has in several instances been abused by its inconsiderate exercise, and to remedy this, the platform upon which I was elected recommends the formulation in a statute of the conditions under which such a temporary restraining order ought to issue. A statute can and ought to be framed to embody the best modern practice, and can bring the subject so closely to the attention of the court as to make abuses of the process unlikely in the future.

WRITHED IN FLAMES FOR NINE MINUTES

Vengeance of Texas Mob Wreaked on Negro Accused of Assaulting White Woman.

Rockwall, Tex., March 8.—After having been identified by Mrs. Arthur McKinney as the negro who attempted a criminal assault upon her Friday morning, Anderson Ellis was taken from the Rockwall county jail Sunday night and secured to an iron stake driven into the earth and burned to death in the presence of about a thousand persons.

Earlier in the evening Will Clark, a negro, was shot and instantly killed when his father, Andrew Clark, refused permission to a posse to search his premises on the assumption that Ellis was concealed there.

People were here from several towns and from Dallas, Collin and Hunt, as well and Rockwall county, to witness the execution of the negro.

Ellis admitted his guilt, but refused to make a statement or to leave farewell messages for his relatives.

He did not utter a cry as the pile of cordwood, which had been well saturated with kerosene, was set afire, nor did he show loss of nerve as the flames cooked his flesh. He was dead within nine minutes after the torch had been applied.

The burning occurred in the public square of the city. At an early hour Friday morning Mrs. McKinney went into her back yard and was seized by the negro Ellis, an employe of McKinney, who attempted to assault her. She fought desperately, and the negro, running away, called that he would murder her should she reveal his attempted act.

The alarm spread quickly, and the entire section turned out, joining the authorities in the chase after the negro. The search continued through Friday and Saturday.

When a posse Sunday arrived at the farmhouse of Andrew Clark, a negro, a demand was made to search the premises on the supposition that the negro Ellis was there in hiding. Upon refusal the inmates were commanded to surrender and two negroes were observed to run from the rear of the house.

Shots were fired at them, and one of them, William Clark, a son of the negro farmer, was killed. The other negro, now known to be Ellis, escaped. He was surrounded in a farmhouse three miles south of Caddo Mills. Ellis, armed, made a desperate resistance and emptied his weapon at the posse.

During the fight with the posse Ellis was wounded twice. The negro was placed in the Rockwall county jail. When it became generally known that Ellis was held in the jail a quiet but determined crowd of men overpowered the jailer, secured his keys, unlocked the cell and brought the negro down.

There was no rowdying. The negro was securely tied to an iron stake. Cordwood, saturated with kerosene, was piled about him, and, upon his refusal to make a statement beyond admitting his guilt, in the presence of Mrs. McKinney, who fully identified him as her assailant, the torch was applied.

Norwich, N. Y., March 8.—Henry C. Jacobs, a prominent Central New York labor agitator, was Sunday shot twice through the head by his wife, who then shot herself, inflicting a wound from which she died.

The reason for the rash deed was jealousy. Mrs. Jacobs left a public statement, in which she accused Mrs. Harriet Garner, of Chicago, a nurse, who for the past 11 months has been caring for her husband's father, of breaking up her home. She states that Jacobs had admitted his infatuation.

Wilner killed himself by taking poison and then shooting himself.

GOD'S LAW OR MAN'S DESIRE?

Ezra the Scribe Works a Great Moral Reform at Jerusalem.

BY THE "HIGHWAY AND BYWAY" PREACHER

(Copyright, 1902, by the Author, W. E. Edson.)

Scripture Authority—Book of Ezra especially chapter eight.

Ezra's Great Reform.—The great distinctive mission which Ezra performed on his second visit to Jerusalem was the breaking up of the promiscuous marriages with the heathen peoples about, and which were in direct violation of the Mosaic law, and threatened the very existence of the Jewish nation. His first step was to enforce separation from their wives upon all who had made heathen marriages, in which number were included many priests and Levites, as well as other Israelites, the list of the chief offenders being given in the last chapter of the book. All this was effected in little more than six months after his arrival at Jerusalem, showing the energy and the intense earnestness of the man. With the detailed account of this important reform, Ezra's autobiography ends abruptly, and we hear nothing more of him till 13 years afterward, in the twentieth year of Artaxerxes, we find him again at Jerusalem with Nehemiah, the Tirshatha. As Ezra is not mentioned after Nehemiah's departure for Babylon in the thirty-second year of Artaxerxes, and as every thing fell into confusion during Nehemiah's absence, it is not unlikely that Ezra may have died or returned to Babylon before that year.

SERMONETTE.

In order that we may understand the seriousness of the conditions which had arisen at Jerusalem we must remember that the marriage of the Jews to the Gentiles was strictly forbidden by the Mosaic law (Deut. 7:2, 3), and that only the lower classes were guilty in this matter, but the practice was shared in by many of the priests and the Levites, as well as leading men of the city. This great irregularity would inevitably bring many evils in its train; it would encourage and increase idolatry, as well as break down the barriers of distinction which, for important purposes, God had raised between the Israelites and all other people. Ezra foresaw these dangerous consequences; but was overwhelmed with a sense of the difficulty of correcting the evil, when matrimonial alliances had been formed, families reared, affections engaged, and important interests established.

And the first thing that Ezra did in the face of that awful sin and great difficulty was to pray. He prayed at the time of the evening sacrifice when the people would be gathered together for worship, and he prayed so in the Spirit that God moved on the hearts of the people, and some of the more penitent of the leaders, realizing that there was but one course to pursue in dealing with evil, suggested that they put away the Gentile wives.

That is the only sure, safe way to deal with any sin. It may be like cutting the heart in two; it may mean giving up all that life seems to hold dear, but if it is the thing that is standing between the soul and God it is the thing which much be cut out.

Desperate diseases require desperate remedies, and while in this case it seemed like a repudiation of solemn obligations, still it must be remembered that God's law came first, and that no human obligation could possibly come before the obligation to God. This was peculiarly so with the Jewish nation, for upon the keeping of the nation pure depended the coming of Christ himself. Personal purity not only involves the present but future generations.

The incident before us suggests two New Testament admonitions: "Be ye not unequally yoked together with unbelievers; for what fellowship hath righteouness with unrighteousness?" and this: 'Wherefore come out from among them, and be ye separate, saith the Lord, and touch not the unclean thing; and I will receive you."

THE STORY.

JARIB was face to face with the crisis of his life. As he stood out there under the stars he did not know which way to turn. He feared to go home and break the news, and he knew he could not go back on the pledge which he had made that evening, as he had stood before the altar while the smoke of the sacrifice was ascending to heaven.

It seemed like a dream, and yet he knew it was all only too true. He had never felt quite at ease since he had taken to wife the daughter of the rich Gentile merchant, and when Ezra the scribe had pointed out God's law, the awfulness of his sin had swept over him. He, priest and one of the leaders among the people, had violated the law of Moses and the sanctity of God's service by his marriage to a heathen woman, and in the remorse of the moment there had been but one thought, and that was his sin against God.

Then Shechaniah, transgressor like himself and the others of the law, had stood up and said unto Ezra:

'We have trespassed against our God, and have taken strange wives of the people of the land; yet there is hope in Israel concerning this thing. Now, therefore, let us make a covenant with our God to put away all the wives, and such as are born of them, according to the counsel of my Lord, and of those that tremble at the commandment of our God; and let it be done according to the law. Arise, for this matter belongeth unto thee; we also will be with thee; be of good courage and do it."

And then he had seen Ezra the scribe arise. Never would he forget the awful agony depicted in that face, for the sin of the people seemed all written there in its dreadful blackness. The disheveled hair and the bare places where Ezra in his agony had plucked out great handfuls and the rent garments. Never would he forget that voice as it demanded in stern tones that the pledge to this thing be taken. And he and the other priests and Levites and the people gathered there before Ezra had taken the solemn vow that they would each and every one put away the strange wives as Shechaniah had promised.

And as Jareb stood out there under the stars after it was all over, he wondered how he could ever carry out the pledge he had made. True he had taken the daughter of the people of the land, but she was beautiful, and he loved her and the child which had been born to them. And now he must put her away. He had sworn that he would obey the law of God.

He knew in the depths of his heart that in thus pledging he had done right. And yet on the other hand there was the natural affection and desire of his own heart. He had permitted his affections to be cultivated in forbidden and unholy directions. He had turned a deaf ear to the promptings of his conscience, as he had permitter the charms of the woman he married to enmesh him. Others were doing the same thing, why could not he take a wife from among the people of the land? This woman was beautiful, and her father rich. Why should he not gratify the desires of his own heart?

So the easy pathway of desire and pleasure had been traveled, and now he had come face to face with his sin. Now he had come to the parting of the ways. The crisis of his life was upon him. The conflict between God's law and the desires of his own heart had begun.

How could he give up the thing which had come to fill such a place in his life and heart? How could he break the news to the woman whom he had taken to be his wife?

Ah, the awful agony of that hour of struggle. He had pledged his word, and he knew he had pledged aright, but oh, how could he carry out the cruel decree against himself and the woman and child in his home?

'But I must give up one or the other," he cried, as he lifted his eyes to heaven. "Oh, it cannot be my God, the God of Abraham and Isaac and Jacob! If I turn from him I cut myself off from all the promises of my people—oh, I cannot! And yet, oh, how can I do this other thing?"

"But neither your wife nor her people believe in your God," spoke up his accusing conscience. "Yea, more, there is a secret contempt in her heart for your people and your religion, and you know how she would turn you completely from following your God."

"Yea, I know," Jarib cried out in anguish, "but I love her in spite of it all."

"And all because you have allowed this evil love to grow up in your life, and have not held yourself to your pledge of loyalty to the God of Israel," came back the accusing voice of conscience.

Jarib bowed his head and was silent. He knew it was true. He knew he alone was to blame.

"Ah, sin demands an awful price," he sighed. 'The easiest way to walk is the road which leads along the line of God's law. Oh, if I had not gone into the ways of the world. Oh, if when this temptation had first come I had only turned from it."

"But the past is gone. It is too late to recall it," again came the voice of conscience. There is only one way that leads towards God, and that is straight ahead. You cannot go back and undo the past, but you can order your life now according to God's perfect law."

"Yes, I can, and I will," cried Jarib, determinedly. "May God help me to keep my pledge to him, and as far as possible to make atonement for the great sin which I have committed in Israel."

The More Lasting Remembrance.

If your name is to live at all, it is so much more to have it live in people's hearts than only in their brains! I don't know that one's eyes fill with tears when he thinks of the famous inventor of logarithms, but a song of Burns or a hymn of Charles Wesley goes straight to your heart and you can't help loving both of them, the sinner as well as the saint.—Oliver Wendell Holmes.

The Three Main Duties.

Men's proper business in this world falls mainly into three divisions—First, to know themselves and the existing state of the things they have to do with; secondly, to be happy in themselves and in the existing state of things; thirdly, to mend themselves and the existing state of things, as far as either are marred and mendable.—Colton.

The great secret of happiness is to study to accommodate our own minds to things external rather than accommodate things external to ourselves.—Dugald Stewart.

When we are made a witness of the power of evil, then it is time to set about measuring our own strength.—Royston.

FIRST USED BY CHILDREN.

Older Members of Family Slow to Adopt the Table Napkin.

Curiously enough, the table napkin, now deemed almost indispensable, was first used only by children, and was adopted by elder members of the family only about the middle of the fifteenth century. In etiquette books of an earlier date than this, among other sage pieces of advice for children, are instructions about wiping their fingers and lips with their napkins.

It seems that the tablecloth was long enough to reach the floor, and served the grown people in place of napkins. When they did begin to use napkins, they placed them first on the shoulder, then on the left arm, and finally tied them about the neck. A French writer, who evidently was conservative and did not welcome the napkin kindly, records with scorn:

"The napkin is placed under the chin and fastened in the back, as if one was going to be shaved. A person told me that he wore his that way that he might not soil his beautiful frills."

It was a difficult matter to tie the two corners in the back, and it is said that thence originated our expression for straitened circumstances: "Hard to make both ends meet." This custom led to the habit shown by waiters of carrying a napkin across the left arm.

Napkins became popular in France sooner than in England. At one time it was customary at great French dinners to change the napkins at every course, to perfume them with rose water, and to have them folded a different way for every guest.

About 1550 Pierre David published a "Maistre d'hostel," which teaches how to wait on patrons properly, and how to fold all kinds of table napkins in all kinds of fancy shapes.

The shapes were: "Square; twisted; folded in bands; in the forms of double and twisted shells; single shell; double melon; single melon, cock, hen and chickens; pigeon in a basket; partridge; pheasant; two capons in a pie; hare; two rabbits; sucking pig; dog with a collar; pike; carp; turbot; miter; turkey; tortoise; the holy cross; and the Lorraine cross."—The Sunday Magazine.

Bamboo for Paper.

From Kobe Consul John H. Snodgrass writes that a paper famine is feared in Japan, where the large part of the raw material is supplied from bamboos, which has led to the following step being taken:

So real is the danger that the government has decided to adopt remedial measures. The authorities have requested the paper mills department of the Mitsu Bishi Kaisha to take over an area of bamboo woods in the Toraku district of Formosa, covering more than 3,000 cho (7,350 acres), with a view to the conversion of the timber into paper.

It is believed that, with the introduction of proper methods, the woods are capable of yielding as many as 10,000,000 bamboos a year. It has not been decided whether the Kaisha shall establish a paper mill in Formosa or send the article in a partly manufactured state to Japan, but in either case it is believed that the development of this new source of the raw material for paper will be of considerable importance to the empire, and will, perhaps, overcome the necessity of looking to foreign countries in the future for its supply of raw material.

BABY HORRIBLY BURNED

By Boiling Grease—Skin All Came Off One Side of Face and Head—Thought Her Disfigured for Life.

Used Cuticura: No Scar Left.

"My baby was sitting beside the fender and we were preparing the breakfast when the frying-pan full of boiling grease was upset and it went all over one side of her face and head. Some one wiped the scald with a towel, pulling the entire skin off. We took her to a doctor. He tended her a week and gave me some stuff to put on. But it all festered and I thought the baby was disfigured for life. I used about three boxes of Cuticura Ointment and it was wonderful how it healed. In about five weeks it was better and there wasn't a mark to tell where the scald had been. Her skin is just like velvet. Mrs. Hare, 1, Henry St., South Shields, Durham, England, March 22, 1908."

His First Visit.

The wide check of his suit and his monocle proclaimed his nationality from afar. His first American acquaintance, met on the steamer, had supplied him with an immense amount of strange and wonderful information about the United States.

"And since you are an Englishman," it was explained, "every store will at once charge you from five to ten times what they would ask an American."

"Eh! What?" said the Britisher, aghast, and then with a look of great cunning: "But, my word! I shawn't tell them, don't you know!"

The readers of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages, and that is Catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure now known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers that they offer One Hundred Dollars for any case that it fails to cure. Send for list of testimonials.

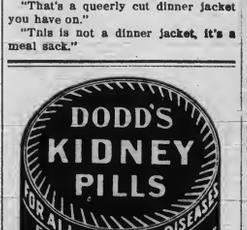
No Temperament.

"One of your daughters married an artist, did she not?"

"Yes, and he beats her dreadfully."

"The artistic temperament. Who did her sister marry?"



"A coal heaver, and he loves her devotedly and never gives her a cross word."

Last Friday night a thief was discovered in the store of Edward Bros., after the place had been locked for the night. Ralph Edwards and Rivolette DeMoisey going to the store to get some cigars after coming from the Masonic lodge, heard someone up stairs. Surrounding the building it was thought the thief would be caught, but he slipped out at the back door, and as he was going over the fence, both Edwards and DeMoisey fired two shots each, but without effect except to accelerate his speed. It is supposed the man secreted himself in the building during the business hours for the purpose of robbing the store. No clue to his identity has been secured.

Last Thursday night about 8 o'clock several little boys playing on Main street, discovered a fire among the dry goods in the store of E P. Northcutt, and immediately gave the alarm. The origin of the fire is a mystery, but it is supposed to have been communicated from a gasoline light to a pile of dry goods lying on a table. The fire, when discovered, was in a great blaze, and it seemed that the building and its contents were doomed, but the activity of several breaking through the glass door and dashing several buckets of water over the flames, together with the contents of a fire extinguisher, soon put out the fire. The loss was small, and $50 will cover it. The building is known as the Walton Opera House, and is owned by A. M. Edwards, and is a large frame structure that would have been great food for a fire, and once fully started it would have jeopardized much valuable property. Mr. Northcutt had no insurance,

WHICH?

Which way do you skim your milk? It is hard sometimes to realize just how great the loss of cream is with crocks and pans. Some people may not believe that a

skims enough closer than the old way to increase their butter yield one-fourth or more. But it does, and there's a plain reason for it. When you set milk the cream and skim milk are separated from one another by the force of gravity, but when you skim milk with a U. S. Separator centrifugal force, which is thousands of times stronger than gravity, does the separating. It squeezes out the last drop of cream. Cream is money—you can't afford to waste it. If you keep three or more cows, it will pay you to buy a U. S. Separator. Come in and look one over, anyway. They are sold by

The Erlanger Minstrel Co.

Considering the weather, last Saturday afternoon and evening the Erlanger Minstrel Co. was given a flattering welcome in Burlington and in return the company entertained its patrons in a very pleasing manner. The first section of the program consisted principally of songs in which the choruses were splendid and received hearty applause. Part second of the program caught the crowd good and strong at the start. The Erlanger Comedy Four, Adolf Snitz—H. Kramer; Abraham Levi—G. Gebhard; Machael Casey—H. Stephen; Willie Johnson—N. Kramer, making a decided hit as did Mr. Geo. C. Bloss, "With us in Pat Malone." J. Myers' "Local Work," was well received by the audience, while "The Old Time Negro Comedy, 'Befor' De Wah,'" was a happy conclusion of a most creditable evening's entertainment. The company is deserving of a more liberal patronage than that it was accorded last Saturday night.

EASY TO MIX THIS.

Simple Recipe for Kidney or Bladder Trouble or Rheumatism.

What will appear very interesting to many people here is the article taken from a New York daily paper, giving a simple prescription, which is said to be a positive remedy for backache or kidney or bladder derangement, if taken before the stage of Bright's disease:

Fluid Extract Dandelion, one-half ounce; Compound Kargon, one ounce; Compound Syrup Sarsaparilla, three ounces. Shake well in a bottle and take in teaspoonful doses after each meal and again at bedtime.

A well-known druggist here at home, when asked regarding this prescription, stated that the ingredients are all harmless, and can be obtained at a small cost from any good prescription pharmacy, or the mixture would be put up if asked to do so. He further stated that while this prescription is often prescribed in rheumatic afflictions with splendid results, he could see no reason why it would not be a splendid remedy for kidney and urinary troubles and backache as it has a peculiar action upon the kidney structure, cleansing these most important organs and helping them to sift and filter from the blood the foul acids and waste matter which cause sickness and suffering. Those of our readers who suffer can make no mistake in giving it a trial.

Crowded Out.

Rev. Edgar D. Jones' article, "On Christians Unity?" was not used last week because of the crowded condition of these columns.

A Pest with a Sting.

America is threatened with another pest. The French brown-tail moth is almost, if not quite, in the midst of us. He came over in nursery packages from France and is only awaiting the gladsome days of spring to break forth, expand and begin pesting, just as though he were at the old stand. He will compete as a foreign pauper pest with our own infant industries in the pest line. If you do not know what the French brown-tail moth does to the human race you will learn if he decides to sojourn among us and to increase and multiply, says the Chicago Daily News. Archery is his hobby. Unlike the bee and the mosquito, which have but one stinger, the little French brown-tail carries a quiver full of arrows, which he shoots in passing as a small boy trains his popgun on a bald head. There is no chance to slap him on the wrist in return, for he stings without alighting and then moves on to the next victim. No wonder the scientists who saw him first are very anxious to find a way to put him gently to the bad.

There is comfort for the murderers of the king's English in the latest contribution to periodical literature by Mr. Lounsbury, emeritus professor of English at Yale, excusing and in a measure justifying some of the so-called vulgar mistakes in orthography and grammar committed by uneducated people. According to Prof. Lounsbury, there is, or was, the best of authority for saying pint for point, jist for joist, ile for oil and bile for boil. Our'n and your'n and his'n are upheld by ancient usage. The double negation is similiarly vindicated and there are a dozen instances of the use of learn in the sense of teach in Shakespeare. It is gratifying to note that the professor draws the line on "I done it." There are limits to what are euphoniously termed archaic forms of speech, it seems.

A report declares that in the state of New York marriages have decreased 20,000 during the past year. Yet this is President Roosevelt's own commonwealth. It is more than likely that the depressed condition in many lines of business and labor will account for much of this falling off. In the early part of the year thousands of men were out of employment and were probably looking for work harder than they were looking for wives. The present year gives promise of being a prosperous one, and it is safe to predict that the marriage record in the Empire state for 1909 will make a far more satisfactory showing.

The Chicago professor's theory that marriage licenses should not be used until six months after they are issued is evidently for the purpose of preventing hasty marriages. But why not go further? Say that marriage licenses shall not be used until the last installment on the furniture is paid; or until both parties to the match have cut their wisdom teeth. Certainly marriage licenses should not be used until after the ink on the divorce decree is dry.

Ellen Emerson, oldest daughter of Ralph Waldo Emerson, and for years his close companion and assistant, died at the home of her sister Edith, wife of William M. Forbes, in Milton, Mass., on January 16, aged 70. Miss Emerson was active in the social and literary life of Concord at all times, and especially in the affairs of the Unitarian church. Besides her sister, a brother, Dr. Waldo Emerson of Concord survives her.

In his various plays Shakespeare used about 15,000 words. Milton used only about half as many in his writings. A person of culture and education has a speaking vocabulary of about 5,000 words; an ordinary person uses from 2,000 to 3,000 words. This would indicate that the 300,000 words of the English langauge include a good many that are seldom employed except in president's messages.

Frank Wentworth of Winsted, Conn., has doped it out that in 2,000,000 years the human race will have developed so far that instead of walking on a pair of alternate pendulums, as now, men will have on their lower extremities wheels actuated by turbines driven by hot air. Here's a chance for some people to get just 2,000,000 years ahead of the rest of us, merely by standing on their heads and talking rapidly.

Mme. Guadalupe de Haro, a Mexican, and a descendant of the Montezumas, is in New York studying domestic science as practiced in the United States. She will carry it back with her to Mexico, and at the bidding of her government introduce it in that country.

TO LEAVE MARCH 23

ROOSEVELT ANNOUNCES DATE OF START FOR AFRICAN HUNT.

HE SPENDS QUIET DAY

Receives Thousands of Messages and Finds It Impossible to Answer Them—One of Last Acts.

Oyster Bay, N. Y.—Ex-President Roosevelt announced Friday for the first time that he will sail from New York for Africa on March 23 at noon. He will take passage on the steamer Hamburg.

Mr. Roosevelt said also that he had received so many letters, telegrams and cablegrams that it would be physically impossible for him to answer one-tenth of them. Wearing a knickerbocker suit he took a vigorous walk through the woods near Sagamore Hill.

Leaves for Africa March 23.

Finally, however, he consented to say a few words and made the first public announcement of the date and steamer on which he is to depart for Africa, which is March 23, by the steamer Hamburg.

It is a happy family at Sagamore Hill. Mr. Roosevelt is enjoying an uninterrupted democratic life and intends to continue to enjoy it until starting on his hunting trip.

Several bouquets of American Beauty roses, the gift of admiring friends, were sent to Sagamore Hill for Mr. and Mrs. Roosevelt from New York.

More than anything else Mr. Roosevelt needs be found is his secretary. A deluge of letters, telegrams and cablegrams poured into Sagamore Hill bringing to the former president the kindly sentiments of friends from all parts of the world. So great is the number of these messages that he asked the press to announce that while he appreciated these and would like to reply to each, it is a physical impossibility for him to answer even one-tenth of them.

Brings Treasured Picture.

Mr. Roosevelt brought with him from Washington a portrait of his mother's old home in Georgia. It was presented to him by Mrs. Ella D. Longstreet, widow of the late Gen. James Longstreet, postmistress at Gainesville, Ga., as representative of the donors, 23 women postmasters throughout the country.

One of his last acts before retiring from office was to issue an order supplementing that made by him August 1, 1905, prohibiting the use of influence to obtain assignments to duty by officers of the navy and marine corps.

The order directs that hereafter all requests and recommendations, written or verbal, received at the navy department from or on behalf of such officers of whatever nature—other than those received through regular official channels—are to be filed with or noted on their record.

MORE INDICTMENTS FOR LIBEL.

New York World Publishers Accused in New Federal Bills.

New York.—The federal grand jury here, which has been investigating alleged libelous publications in connection with the Panama canal purchase, has returned indictments against the Press Publishing Company, publishers of the New York World, and Caleb Van Hamm, one of the editors of the World.

The indictments were filed with District Judge Hoit, sitting in the criminal branch of the United States circuit court. While the indictments were placed under the seal of the court, it is understood that the return will be made on them Friday. It is understood the indictments are framed under the federal omnibus statute which authorizes the prosecution for an offense committed on federal territory not mentioned in the United States revised statutes to be conducted according to the existing state laws.

GOVERNMENT WINS SUGAR SUIT.

Verdict Gives Federal Authorities $134,116 Damages.

New York.—A verdict awarding the United States government $134,116 damages in unpaid customs duties from the American Sugar Refining Company was rendered Friday by a jury which heard charges of misweighing sugar imports.

The verdict rendered was for the full amount sued for by the government on the contention that this sum was due through underweighing by the companies' employes of sugar imports on the company's Brooklyn docks.

TWO HUNDRED DIE IN QUAKE

MASRAN DESTROYED AND JERUSALEM BADLY SHAKEN.

Sultan Orders Turkish Officials to Order Money and Provisions to Stricken City.

Jerusalem.—This city was shaken Wednesday by an earthquake which, it was learned later, destroyed the village of Masran, near here. At least 150 persons are dead and how many more are buried in the ruins is not known at this time. Relief parties were at once sent out to the scene and early reports from them indicated that the disaster is greater than at first supposed. They reported that every home in the village was destroyed and that the groans of scores of buried persons, still alive, can be heard from the debris. Soon several had been extracted from the ruins, but most of them had suffocated.

Constantinople.—The sultan was notified by Pasha Katha that a serious earthquake had taken place near Jerusalem and destroyed the village of Masran, killing probably 200 persons. His majesty at once notified the heads of municipal governments at different points in the realm to prepare succor for those of the victims who still lived and forward provisions and money as generously as was possible in the limited time.

Smyrna, Asiatic Turkey.—Municipal officials of this city immediately upon learning of the destruction of Masran, which is near Jerusalem, by an earthquake, ordered aid to be sent to that village. It was reported here that the dead would number between 200 and 300. Fifty rescuers at once set out from this city with full equipments for taking care of those of the sufferers who had been spared death.

Belluno, Italy.—Thirteen persons are known to have been crushed to death Wednesday in a landslide that struck the village of Tassel. Scores of houses were buried, and it is feared the death list will be greatly increased. Troops have been dispatched to the scene.

Innsbruck, Austria.—The detachment of six officers and 25 men of the Austrian army who were reported as being overwhelmed by an avalanche near La Frann have been rescued. They were found in a tunnel where they had taken refuge. The tunnel was covered with snow.

Blow to "Easy Marriages."

Springfield, Ill.—A bill which seeks to restrict the divorce evil in Illinois and to throw new safeguards around the issuance of marriage licenses was introduced in the house Tuesday by Representative Dillon of Galena.

The bill has the backing of Episcopal and Catholic clergymen of the state. It seeks to prohibit the "easy marriage" of divorced persons and imposes both a heavy fine and a jail sentence for divorced persons who make a false statement in the request for a license.

Girl Stenographer Claims $6,000,000.

Lansing, Mich.—Miss Ione Rickerd, a stenographer in the office of the secretary of the Michigan grand lodge of Odd Fellows, is reported to have established a claim to a $6,000,000 share of a $44,000,000 estate in Scotland and Canada which was left by a great-uncle.

Would Rescue Arctic Explorer.

New York.—Rear Admiral Schley, on behalf of the Arctic club of America, of which he is president, in a letter appeals for financial aid to enable Dillon Wallace, explorer, to effect a rescue of Dr. Frederick Albert Cook from the Arctic regions, where he has been lost since July, 1907.

Noted Architect Dead.

Detroit, Mich.—Elijah E. Myers, noted architect and designer of state capitols and public buildings, died yesterday in this city.

REFUSES TO AID IN LIBEL CASE.

Federal Attorney at Indianapolis Resigns Place.

Indianapolis. — The resignation of Joseph B. Kealing, United States district attorney, who refuses to take part in the government's Panama libel suit, has caused much comment here and there is much speculation concerning his probable successor.

It has been known to a few of his friends that Mr. Kealing did not approve of the method adopted under instructions from President Roosevelt of prosecuting the Indianapolis News and New York World editors, but his resignation came as a surprise to many.

Mr. Kealing has held the office of United States district attorney for nearly eight years, and his standing with the department of justice is said to be high. In connection with the Ekhart bank case Mr. Kealing prosecuted and convicted all the officials of that institution, including Walter Brown, who was his close personal friend and a member of the Republican state committee.

TEN MEET DEATH IN A FIRE.

Tenement House in New York Destroyed by Blaze.

New York. — Cut off from escape by a burning stairway, ten persons perished Wednesday in a five-story tenement house at 372-4 Seventh avenue. The victims, who were all Italians, with the exception of an unidentified Frenchman, ranged in age from 60 years to an infant girl of five. Five persons, including a policeman, who was cut by flying glass, and a male child about a year old, were injured and taken to hospitals. It was at first believed that the blaze was incendiary, following a "black hand" blackmailing letter which an occupant of the building received several months ago.

The fire marshals and police after investigating reported that the fire was not of incendiary origin.

The only member of the Travisano family who survived the fire was Minnie, aged 15, who left home to visit friends.

California Senate Adopts a Resolution Addressed to Congress.

Sacramento, Cal.—In lieu of an anti-Japanese statute the senate has expressed its view on the subject of Asiatic immigration by adopting a resolution calling upon congress to enact an Asiatic exclusion law that would keep Japanese as well as Chinese aliens out of the country.

Senator J. B. Sanford tried to amend the resolution so that Japanese would be denied the right of naturalization, but this was voted down. The vote on the resolution was 28 to 7.

FINDS GEMS WORTH $100,000

GREEK TRIES TO SELL MRS. HEINZE'S PEARLS.

Is Arrested in Omaha, But Says He Found Necklace in Gutter in New York.

Omaha, Neb.—While trying to sell to Albert Edholm, a local jeweler, a necklace worth at least $100,000, and possibly much more, John D. Sclavinitis, a Greek who for the convenience of Americans calls himself Savis, was arrested Thursday by the Omaha police.

The necklace consists of a single string of 63 pearls, carefully matched and fastened with a clasp set with a diamond of unusual size. According to Mr. Edholm, whose opinion is corroborated by other experts, the strand may be valued as high as $300,000.

Savis entered the jewelry store and presented a single pearl which he offered to sell. Assuring himself of its genuineness, Mr. Edholm gave him a valuation of $50 or $60, whereupon the Greek offered to sell him a dozen at $40 each, but said a friend had them.

By a ruse the jeweler succeeded in notifying the police and two detectives were sent to the store, where the man was arrested. At the station a search revealed the entire necklace, which he was carrying in his pocket. The Greek was heavily armed when arrested, but made no effort to resist the detectives.

The police had received from the New York police department the description of the necklace, which was said to have disappeared from the Knickerbocker hotel in that city November 26 last. This information, however, did not reveal the name of the owner. Savis said he was employed by the Knickerbocker hotel for 13 months, in a position known as sidewalk man.

He was sweeping refuse from the walk into the gutter, and as he brushed it over the curb he saw the necklace lying in the gutter with some rubbish.

SPERRY RELIEVED FROM DUTY.

Seaton Schroeder Appointed Commander of the Atlantic Fleet.

Washington.—Rear Admiral Charles S. Sperry Tuesday made formal application to be relieved from duty as commander-in-chief of the Atlantic battleship fleet, and Rear Admiral Seaton Schroeder has been appointed in his place.

Admiral Sperry was tendered the presidency of the Naval War college, but declined the position, indicating his preference for subordinate duty there.

Rear Admiral Richard Wainwright will remain in command of the second squadron of the fleet, Rear Admiral William T. Potter is transferred from commander of the Fourth division to command the Third division, formerly in charge of Rear Admiral Schroeder, and Rear Admiral Edward B. Barry, who has been supervisor of naval auxiliaries at New York, has been appointed to a higher office.

Admiral Sperry will haul down his flag as commander-in-chief on the 8th inst., when Admiral Schroeder will assume command. The impression is that his tenure will be but temporary, and that before the summer is over he will turn over the command to Admiral Wainwright.

Lese Majeste.

A teacher in one of the schools of Berlin has given to the papers of that city a composition written by one of the pupils in his school on the subject, "The Kaiser," in the course of which the young author says: "Prince Wilhelm was born on the kaiser's birthday. From the dome of the castle 101 salute shots were fired. The old grandfather and old Wrangel hopped into a cab and went to the schloss, and old Wrangel said: 'The boy is all right,' and the father made a bow from the balcony, and it was awful cold. And when the boy was baptized his father held his watch in front of the little fellow's nose, and he grabbed it and never let go again, because he is a Hohenzollern."

PRESIDENT WILLIAM H. TAFT

FURIOUS STORM MARS INAUGURATION OF TAFT

New President Takes Oath and Delivers Address in Senate Chamber.

Washington, Mar. 5.—William H. Taft was inaugurated as president yesterday amid the worst weather conditions that ever have marked the great national event. So severe was the snow and sleet storm that the new chief magistrate was forced to take the oath and deliver his inaugural address in the senate chamber.

For more than 24 hours the storm raged, and at noon there was about eight inches of snow on the ground. The wind thrashed many of the city's prettiest decorations to threads. The immense reviewing stands along the line of march were made well nigh uninhabitable by the swirling snow. Street car and railroad traffic was impeded to the extent of seriously delaying the arrival of thousands who had planned to attend the inaugural ceremonies.

The nation's capital, for many hours, was cut off from all wire communication with the rest of the world.

It was a day of strenuosity in Washington and as if in sympathy with the outgoing executive the weather made a blizzardly appeal to the thousands who were not deterred by the worst that the weather man could turn on.

To add the final touch of strenuosity, Mr. Roosevelt declined to ride to the railroad station from which he departed to Oyster Bay. He walked through the snow.

Ball and Parade Given.

Though the thousands of citizens who had come here from all over the country were denied the privilege of witnessing the solemn ceremonies attending the administering of the oath to the new president, the more spectacular features of the day were not omitted. All who braved the storm saw the great inaugural parade carried out substantially as it had been planned; and in the evening the inaugural ball and the display of fireworks were given with their brilliancy undimmed by the adverse weather conditions.

The ball, given in the Pension building, was magnificent, as it always is. It was attended by a tremendous throng. In the center of the great hall which occupies the lower floor of the structure, a space was roped off. The visitors stood outside the open place waiting the arrival of President and Mrs. Taft and Vice-President and Mrs. Sherman. They came finally and stayed on the main floor for some time, and then retired for the president's box in the gallery above, where they watched the proceedings below.

Unusual success attended the efforts of the committee that had charge of decorating the ballroom, and it was generally admitted that such wonderfully beautiful effects had rarely, if ever, before been accomplished.

A vaulted canopy of bunting reduced the great height of the hall by some 40 feet. The color scheme of this canopy was a deep cream tint and this was also carried out behind the two-storied colonnades which encircled the court, forming a background to the elaborate floral decorations.

Novel Illumination Scheme.

The illumination of the great ballroom was carried out on radically different lines from those followed hitherto. Instead of embodying the lights in the floral decoration, following the structural lines of the cornices or arches, the principal groups of lights were placed with a view to securing the best general illumination falling equally upon the decorations and the guests. This result was secured by suspending from the vaulted ceiling 18 large fixtures composed of hexagonal frames supporting clusters of 125 globular lamps of frosted glass, each lamp hanging from a separate wire, and the whole arranged in a bowl-shaped mass. This mass of drooping lights was suspended by six gilded chains secured to a sturdy ring and heavy chain above, suspending the entire fixture from the vaulted ceiling. Supplementing this provision for general illumination, half octagon brackets, each with a cluster of 20 small lamps suspended from it, were placed over each of the first story columns of the arcade.

Grand Fireworks Display.

For the benefit of the throngs who could not attend the ball, there was an illumination and fireworks display such as Washington never before saw. Historic Pennsylvania avenue was ablaze with light from end to end. Not only were all the business houses brilliantly illuminated, but across the street were stretched numerous electric festoons. The Peace monument, for the first time since its erection soon after the civil war, was put to the use for which it was originally intended—that of a fountain—and powerful searchlights were turned on the great volume of water that was thrown into the air.

On the ellipse south of the White House a display of aerial fireworks began at 7:30 o'clock, and for hours was watched by a most delighted multitude.

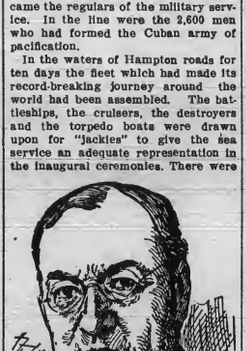
The display began by the discharge of 101 aerial guns, the national salute, and was followed by the lighting of 250 prismatic fires which changed color a number of times. The illumination was superb and the effect of the changing tints on the towering marble shaft of the Washington monument was extremely beautiful. Then came the flight of 150 rocket bombs fired from several positions so as to blend their various colors, and then in rapid succession the discharge of a battery of magnesium balloons followed by a marvelous "sun cluster" and batteries of fiery cobras, and the burning of great quantities of ruby fire, which gave its red tint to every object within a radius of many squares.

National Shield in Bombs.

"The Star Spangled Banner" excited the admiration of the great throng of spectators. It was produced by the electrical discharge of many large bombs picturing the national shield in its true colors, suspended among the clouds. One of the great features of the display was the wonderful "Pillar of Light," rising 100 feet into the air, arranged in five tiers and lighting up the whole southern section of the city. Then came batteries of lightning candles emitting blinding flashes, closely resembling real lightning, and followed by peals of thunder. Another new feature was the crescendo repeating bombs. The first shell fired broke with one explosion, the second with two, and so on up to the twenty-first with twenty-one explosions.

Among the many other novelties was an immense shell which was fired into the air several hundred feet and released a monster streamer in the inspiring colors of "Old Glory."

Battle in the Sky.



Nearly the last and the greatest sensation of the whole exhibition was a set piece: "The Battle in the Sky," showing a city with its spires and lofty buildings, some of them 100 feet high, and filling a space on the ground 500 feet long. An airship is seen passing over it, followed by others. These turn and are met by an opposing aerial fleet, when a battle ensues. One airship after another is set on fire, and falls. In the meantime other airships float over the city, dropping fiery bombs, wrecking the buildings which crumble and fall until all are utterly destroyed. The action of the encounter of the aeroplanes and the destruction of the city were marvelously realistic.

Parade in the Snow.

The paraders in the afternoon had a hard time of it, but manfully pushed their way through the snow and slush. Maj. Gen. J. Franklin Bell was the grand marshal.

The military division had the right of way after the president's escort. At its head were the West Point cadets and the midshipmen from the naval academy at Annapolis. The cadets of both schools were cheered, as they always have been cheered at every inaugural parade in which they have taken part. Immediately behind the future officers of army and navy came the regulars of the military service. In the line were the 2,600 men who had formed the Cuban army of pacification.

In the waters of Hampton roads for ten days the fleet which had made its record-breaking journey around the world had been assembled. The battleships, the cruisers, the destroyers and the torpedo boats were drawn upon for "jackies" to give the sea service an adequate representation in the inaugural ceremonies. There were

Vice-President Sherman.

3,000 sailors from the Connecticut, the Illinois and the other ships of Sperry's fleet in the parade. The marines followed the sailors.

National Guardsmen There.

Next came the National Guardsmen from various states of the union, and their excellent marching and evolutions elicited enthusiastic applause.

In the rear of the military division came the civic organizations. There were in line more than 100 clubs and political associations from all parts of the country, nearly all of them wearing some unique and distinguishing uniform.

Public Photograph Gallery.

The Royal Photographic Society of England, has been annoyed by the refusal of the National portrait gallery to exhibit photographs and has decided to establish a national gallery of photographic portraiture. The scheme has met with enthusiastic support from all those interested in the photographic art. A large number of photographs has been received and the gallery will be thrown open to the public at certain periods in the near future.

STOMACH DISTRESS.

And all Misery from Indigestion Vanishes Five Minutes Later.

Every family here ought to keep some Diapepsin in the house, as any one of you may have an attack of Indigestion or Stomach trouble at any time, day or night.

This harmless preparation will digest anything you eat and overcome a sour stomach five minutes afterwards.

If your meals don't tempt you, or what little you do eat seems to fill you, or lays like a lump of lead in your stomach, or if you have heartburn, that is a sign of Indigestion.

Ask your Pharmacist for a 50-cent case of Pape's Diapepsin and take one triangule after supper tonight. There will be no sour risings, no belching of undigested food mixed with acid, no stomach gas or heartburn, fullness or heavy feeling in the stomach, Nausea, Debilitating Headaches, Dizziness or Intestinal griping. This will all go, and besides, there will be no sour food left over in the stomach to poison your breath with nauseous odors.

Pape's Diapepsin is a certain cure for all stomach misery, because it will take hold of your food and digest it just the same as if your stomach wasn't there.

Actual, prompt relief for all your stomach misery is at your Pharmacist, waiting for you.

These large 50-cent cases contain more than sufficient to cure a case of Dyspepsia or Indigestion.

A Good Sale.

A very large crowd attended the Cochran & Kruthoffer sale, last Thursday, and everything except cattle brought good prices. Bidding was brisk and stock &c., sold as follows: Corn 80 to 81 cents a bushel; cows $35 to $50; work horses as high as $300 a pair; mules $325 to $420 a span; weanling mules $150; 2-year-old colt $110; hogs 5 cents a pound; yearling cattle $25 a head; angora goats $2 per head. The farming implements brought good prices. The monotony of the sale was interrupted twice during the day a couple of hostile meetings on the part of some of the pugilistic inclined attendants. A bountiful hot lunch was served at the noon hour. The sale amounted to $480.

Seed Corn.

Distribution of seed corn to the farmers of the State, with the idea of improving the yield, has begun by the Commissioner of Agriculture, and farmers in any part of the State can obtain the corn upon complying with the specifications laid down by the department. The corn has been bought from J. Letterlee & Son, of Harrods Creek; C. W. Caldwell, of Danville, and J. H. Templeman, of Carlisle. It is Snow Flake and Boone County White, and it is hoped that the yield of corn in Kentucky can be considerably increased. Each farmer who gets the corn must agree to make a report on the crop grown from it.

Too Much Water.

The rural mail carrier from Petersburg has been annoyed very much during the month last past by back-water in Woolper creek, which reached a depth of several feet on the bridge near the mouth of the creek, cutting off a considerable portion of his route.

He Has Reconsidered.

After due consideration and mature deliberation Dudley Blyth has concluded that old Kentucky is good 'nough for him, and has abandoned the idea of going to Grand Junction, Colorado, but, on the contrary will continue to take his meals with his father and mother for an indefinite period.

The dark moon in March is the time to plant potatoes. Will you ready to do that work? The time close at hand.

Judge Carmack was in town yesterday.

Adulterated Potatoes.

A Kansas grocer bought five sacks of potatoes from a commission firm. They weighed 530 pounds. In the five sacks there were sixty-five pounds of earth, showing that the potatoes had not been cleaned before packing. The grocer wanted the commission man prosecuted, but the Kansas attorney general ruled that the commission man can not be arrested, but that the farmer can be as he was a lulterating his potatoes.

Didn't Want to Sell.

The several big real estate deals that were incubating a few weeks ago were a flash in the pan, and along that line nothing seems to be doing now. Some who thought they wanted to sell their farms discovered they were mistaken when offered the prices they had been demanding, and their land is no longer in the market.

Sent to the Infirmary.

The negress of whom mention was made as being in jail, last week, was transferred to the county infirmary. She was complaining considerable and the authorities thought the infirmary was a better place for her than the bastile, and jailer Adams concurred fully in their opinion.

Spreading Stone.

During the soft weather a force of hands was busy spreading stone on the Burlington and Florence pike, which has put that thoroughfare in very rough condition for the present, but the travel will soon put it in good condition again.

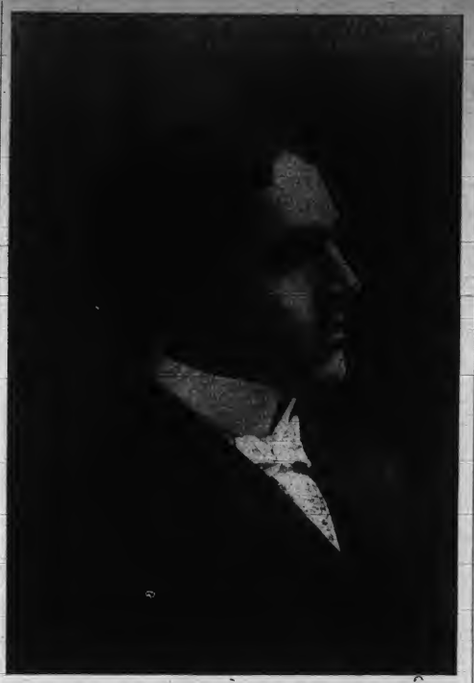
B. B. Hume sold nine horses on the Cincinnati market, one day last week, and realized good prices for them. He has put quite a number "over" since the holidays, and has disposed of several at private sales at long prices.



Damaged by High Water.

It is said that the recent high water damaged very considerably the approaches to the bridge that spans Dry creek near Constance. The approaches were but recently repaired at considerable expense to the county.

D. E. CASTLEMAN.

The above is a good picture of D. E. Castleman, who is a candidate for the Democratic nomination for Commonwealth's Attorney in this the Fifteenth Judicial District of Kentucky, the primary election to be held on Thursday, April 29 next. Mr. Castleman is a native of Gallatin county, being born at Glencoe, on the 27th day of November 1858, consequently he is now in the prime of life. He graduated from Georgetown college in 1883, when he entered the Cincinnati Law School, from which he graduated in 1885, and was admitted to the bar at Warsaw, Gallatin county, immediately thereafter, since which time he has given the practice of law his attention. In 1894 he moved to Burlington from Warsaw, Gallatin county, and in 1901 he was nominated and elected to the office of county attorney, having previously been appointed to that office to fill the unexpired term of John M. Lassing, who resigned to accept an appointment to the Circuit Judgship. He held the office of county attorney from the time of his appointment until January 1, 1905, the close of the term for which he was elected. Mr. Castleman is a man of remarkable energy and is well equipped for the office to which he aspires, and if elected he will make a vigorous prosecutor who will show the evil doers in the district no quarters. In campaigns of the past he has been called to many places in this Congressional district to speak in the interest of the Democratic party, and has always responded promptly. His canvass for the nomination which he is seeking will be full of life from the start, and the candidate who sees more voters in the district than he, will have to go some. Mr. Castleman is a strong jury lawyer, and bases his canvass upon this and other special qualifications and his unswerving party fidelity. Being a citizen of Boone county, a native of Gallatin county, and reared in the neighborhood of Owen county territory, will make him a strong factor at the beginning of the campaign.

FRANK C GREEN.

In the proper place in this issue appears the announcement of Frank C. Greene, of Carroll county, as a candidate for the nomination for re election as Commonwealth's Attorney in this judicial district. On the first day of next January his term as Commonwealth's Attorney will expire. Mr. Greene is a young man of fine address and considerable ability as a criminal lawyer and is a pleasing and convincing speaker. He is a son of the lamented Judge John W. Greene, of Owen county, who died during his second term as circuit judge. If re elected Mr. Greene's six year's experience in the criminal practice in this district will the better prepare him for a second term, and he pledges himself to give the public his very best service if given the office for a second term.

The announcement of the death by drowning of H. F. Russell in the Ohio river two miles below Manchester, Ohio, on last Tuesday, was a great shock to this part of the county where Mr. Russell was well known and held in the highest esteem by all. Mr. Russell had been engaged for several years buying timber for a large saw mill firm in Cincinnati, and he and two other men were in charge of a log raft on the fatal day, and were in a skiff which in some manner was capsized by a rope attached to the raft. The three men were thrown into the stream, Mr. Russell's two companions succeeding in reaching the shore while he went to a watery grave. Mr. Russell was a young man when the rebellion broke out, and he espoused the cause of the union and was among the first troops to go to the front, where he remained until mustered out of the service at the close of the war. For many years after the war he was a citizen of Florence, where he joined the Odd-Fellows' lodge, and was a faithful member of that order until his death. His wife was a Miss Hood, who, with two daughters, survives him. It can truthfully be said of H. F. Russell that he was a high-toned gentleman, whose life is worthy the emulation of all, and his many good deeds and kind acts in life are a monument to his recollection that will endure so long as any of his acquaintances exist. Many friends mourn with his family, whose grief is the more intense because of the tragic manner in which the husband and father was taken from them.

Couldn't Do Without It.

Karl Rouse, who, last week, moved to his new home, the farm he purchased from T. D. Goodridge just previous to Mr. Goodridge's death, thought he had everything about him that he needed, but nevertheless he felt that something was lacking. From day to day the unsatisfied feeling became more intense, until it occurred to him that he had not seen the old familiar face of the RECORDER since he moved from his father's to his new home, and he came straightway to town and handed in his subscription, and now he sleeps sound at night and the sun seems to shine brighter and the birds to sing sweeter. Karl is preparing for a big crop this year.

They Won Out.

Attorney John L. Vest and Joseph Fisher, of Walton, attended quarterly court in Burlington, last Thursday; they being interested in a suit pending in that court, and which grew out of the building of the Walton and Verona turnpike. They were successful in their contention, and judgment for $9, the amount they had tendered the plaintiff, Jesse Wilson, was entered against them.

Farmers' Institute.

Every farmer in the county, who possibly can, should attend the Farmers' Institute which will be held in Walton as per program elsewhere in this issue. The State has gone to considerable expense to have these institutes held, hoping thereby to dispense information on the pursuit of agriculture that will be of interest to the farmers and result in profits to them. The best of talent obtainable will deliver lectures during the session, and the farmer who attends and hears the lectures is bound to get pointers on many subjects that will be of great benefit to him in the future. The lectures are not mere theory but are based on experiments that have been repeated until every element of theory has been removed. The Farmers' Institutes held in this county in the past have not been given the consideration to which they were entitled, and it is hoped that the coming institute will be given a better recognition, and that the farmers will participate in the proceedings to an extent that will make it one of the best meetings of farmers ever held in Kentucky. The way to ascertain what benefit is to be derived from the institute is to attend every day. It will not be many hours after the institute begins until you will be pleased with the proceedings and want to be present all the time. By the way this is a special Institute which the farmers of Walton neighborhood have prevailed upon the Commissioner of Agriculture to grant them, hence the more important it is that there be a good attendance.

M. H. Bourne.

In this issue appears the announcement of M. H. Bourne, of Owen county, as a candidate for Circuit Judge. He is a prominent member of the Owen county bar, and has served his county as Superintendent of Schools, and is now editor of the News-Herald, of Owenton. He has been an active and influential member of the American Society of Equity in his county, where the organization is very strong. If nominated and elected Mr. Bourne will put all his energy and ability in the discharge of the duties of the office, and make the district an official to which it can point with pride.

Arbor Day.

Governor Willson has issued an Arbor Day proclamation fixing Friday, April 2nd as Arbor Day for Kentucky. In connection with it he writes a letter, "To all the boys and girls of Kentucky" urging them to "Stick in at least one tree on Arbor Day and make plans to start many trees every year."

Good Sugar Weather.

The good sugar weather arrived too late in the season this year for anyone to profit by it.

J. W. CAMMACK.

By reference to the announcement column in the RECORDER this week it will be seen that Judge J. W. Cammack is a candidate before the Democratic primary called for April 29, next, for the nomination for re-election as Circuit Judge. Since coming into the office of Judge he has cleaned up the dockets in every county in the district and now has the business of the Circuit Court in better shape than it has been for years, and with his increasing experience there is every assurance if he is re-elected that he will be able during his full term of six years not only to keep the business of the courts up to its present high standard of excellence but greatly improve even these conditions all over the district. While he doubtless feels that he has done his best during the short term of his present incumbency of the office he can but feel that if the people of the district will give him an endorsement now he can, by reason of his experience, give them even better service, and to this end if honored by a re-election, he proposes to lend every energy to improving his work, and, by careful study and patient investigation to fit and qualify himself for ever-increasing usefulness and to lay every power and faculty of his life and being under tribute to the work of the high office of Judge of the Circuit Court. Of course there is now no question as to fitness and qualification, he has given good proof of these ever since he came to the bench, and the people will likely have to be shown several things before they turn him down for another.

It will pay you to advertise your Business in this Paper. Try it.

When the carrier on route 1, from Burlington collects mail addressed to patrons of Petersburg route he necessarially has to carry it on to Burlington, and then the next day it goes round by way of Cincinnati to Petersburg. The same is true of Petersburg carrier. Where two routes run over the same road, as do the Burlington and Petersburg routes, why not the P. O. Department rule that it is the duty of patrons of such routes to put up a box to be used only by carriers of the two routes, to be known as carriers exchange. Then when either carrier collects mail for patrons of the other route, he could deposit same in said box to be delivered by the other carrier, the carrier of the office entitled to the cancellation cancel the stamp and report the same to his office. If such a ruling were in vogue it would facilitate the speedy delivery of mail and in no instance retard it and would save a great amount of unnecessary handling of mail. We frequently receive mail from patrons of Petersburg route. By the plan we mention we would get it the same day mailed, but now we don't get it until the next day. What is true of the Burlington and Petersburg routes is true of hundreds of others throughout the country.

Mrs. McKim was a daughter of the late Edward Fowler, being the oldest of several children. At the age of 16 she united with the Presbyterian church in Burlington, but about 50 years ago she united with Big Bone Baptist church, afterwards moving to Burlington Baptist church, of which she was a devoted member until her death. In November, 1868, she was married to Charles McKim, who survives. To them was born one son, Edward McKim, who died several years ago after passing his majority. The funeral services will be conducted by Rev. Ailie Stith at the Baptist church at 2 o'clock this afternoon, after which the remains will be placed in the vault to await final interment. And thus passes to the beyond one of Burlington's oldest citizens, a Christian lady whose life is worthy the emulation of all. Mrs. McKim leaves three sisters, Mrs. Martha Hawes, Mrs. J. F. Blyth, of Burlington, and Mrs. Laura Tully, of Florida, and one brother, Charles A. Fowler, of Athens, Ohio.

Rather a good looking young man, who claimed to have lost his way in his tramp from Cincinnati to Louisville, blew into town last Saturday, and hunted up Jailer Sammie Adams of whom he requested a night's lodging. Before putting him behind the bars in the second story of the jail, the officer gave the stranger a thorough searching, for fear he might be loaded with tools he desired to get into the possession of the prisoners occupying the first floor. Nothing contraband was found on the applicant for lodging. The Jailer gave the young man his supper and breakfast, and Sunday morning he released him and he went on his way smoking his cigarette—out of money but happy all the same.

The anti-saloon league is said to be clearing the deck for a vote on the local option question in Boone as a whole county. Petersburg and Florence are the only towns in the county where local option does not prevail, and no saloon has existed in Petersburg for many years. The purpose of the vote to be taken is evidently to bring the above named two towns within the local option fold.

The wife and six year old little son of Alonzo Acra, had a narrow escape from serious injury, last Friday. The horse Mrs. Acra was driving, scared at a roll of fencing wire and turned the buggy over, throwing Mrs. Acra out, while the little boy was caught in the buggy top. The mare made a few jumps after the vehicle was turned over and then stopped. The buggy was damaged considerably.

Country Clubs.

Golf would deserve well of the people of America if it had nothing more to its credit than the influence it has exercised toward the establishing of country clubs. No doubt it has much more to its credit, but this is one of its greatest recommendations. The increase in the number of country clubs is a wholesome and pleasing sign of a saner enjoyment of life. There have been plenty of town and village and city clubs before now, many of them serving as centers for an agreeable social life. The objection to them has been that for the most part they were either men's or women's clubs, conducted primarily for the benefit and pleasure of one or the other sex. Moreover, the recreation which they offered was comprised in reading, pool and billiards, cards and bowling, and occasional dances—all indoors. The country club, on the other hand, offers all these diversions to those who wish them, and offers, in addition, the more wholesome sports of golf, tennis, snowshoeing, and sometimes curling, hockey and skating, says the Youths' Companion. Moreover, the sexes stand more on an equality here, and neither need regard itself as the occasional guest of the other. The family life, instead of being interrupted, is broadened and enriched. The part that golf has played in this development is due to the large space which the game requires. Few individuals can secure the necessary land, hence a community of interests which leads eventually to the establishment of a club. Although many country clubs are expensive, there is no need that an association of this kind should be beyond the reach of the family in ordinary circumstances. The scale rests with those who are most concerned. Not least in the merits of the country club is its happy solution of the way in which persons of only moderate means can enjoy the pleasures of a large estate with beautiful grounds.

In these days of gastronomic surprises how about seaweed? The inhabitants of islands in the Pacific ocean, as well as the Chinese and Japanese, have eaten seaweed for many centuries; why, asks the Boston Herald, shouldn't the rest of civilization try to ward off starvation with that excellent food? We are told that the Orientals go out in boats and with long poles, to which stout hooks are attached, tear the seaweed from submerged rocks. On shore the seaweed is spread to dry, boiled in factories and shredded for food, like Iceland moss. A writer says if the gourmet did not regard the cheap food as the least desirable he would insist on his dish of seaweed. But rich and poor scorn the cheap food, however much they growl at the expense of living. As there is nothing new under the sun, some one will undoubtedly rise to say we are even now eating prepared seaweed, only under another name.

The Anti-suffrage association of New York has asked Gov. Hughes to appoint women on state boards, asserting that women of intelligence and judgment can render good public service on educational and reformatory boards. The association asks that the appointments be made as soon as possible, naively adding that such appointments might afford an outlet to the energies of women and their present interest in public matters which would obviate the question of unrestricted suffrage. As this seems to be the milk in the cocoanut for this sudden demand for the recognition of women in public matters, says the Baltimore American, the suffragists will doubtless repudiate with scorn such a palpable sop to Cerberus.

New York woman suffragists advocate taking babies to the polls in that emancipated age when women vote. There is no reason why a checkroom for babies couldn't be provided the same as in the department stores, where the precious bunches of sweetness could be deposited while the mothers were chewing up pencils in efforts to make up their minds as to how they should vote.

An exchange, commenting on the fresh air fad, says it is not shared by the bird that smothers itself under its wing or by the bear that buries itself in a cave for the winter. Nor, it might be added, by the cat which sleeps by the hour with its nose hidden in its fur and the dog curled up into a ball. And none of these creatures, so far as known, ever suffers from tuberculosis.

First class in arithmetic, stand up! The annual report of the Newark free public library shows that 851,009 volumes were drawn from that institution last year. There are 142,493 volumes in the library. Now, asks the Boston Globe, how many volumes were there in the library at the beginning of last year?

A Chicago man wrote the best poem favoring woman's suffrage. This would carry some weight were it not for the fact that he is a bachelor.

PRESIDENT TAFT'S OFFICIAL FAMILY

SKETCHES OF THE NINE EMINENT MEN FORMING HIS CABINET.

P. C. KNOX HEADS THE GROUP

Pennsylvanian Is Secretary of State—Franklin MacVeagh, Chicago Merchant, Holds the Treasury Portfolio—Jacob M. Dickinson, Tennessee Democrat, to Manage the Army—Affairs of the Agricultural Department Left in James Wilson's Hands.

Philander Chase Knox of Pennsylvania, secretary of state in the cabinet of President Taft, was born at Brownsville, Pa., in 1853. He was graduated from Mount Union college, Ohio, in 1872, and three years later was admitted to the bar. During the years 1876 and 1877 he served as assistant United States district attorney for the western district of Pennsylvania. In the latter year he formed a law partnership with James H. Reed which still exists and which has represented many large corporations, including the Carnegie Company. Mr. Knox entered President McKinley's cabinet as attorney general in April, 1901, serving until 1904, when he was elected United States senator from Pensylvania. The latter position he resigned to become the head of President Taft's cabinet.

Wilson Retains His Place.

Only one member of the Roosevelt cabinet retains his portfolio under Mr. Taft. That is James Wilson of Iowa, secretary of agriculture. So excellent had been his work in that position that there was no serious talk of making a change. Born in Scotland in 1835, Mr. Wilson came to the United States in 1852 and three years later settled in Iowa. In 1861 he engaged in farming in Tama county. He was a member of the Iowa assembly for three sessions and speaker of the house for one session, and also was a member of the Iowa state railway commission. In 1873 he was elected to congress, serving two terms, and was sent to the national legislature again for one term in 1883. He was regent of the State university of Iowa in 1870-74, and in 1890 was made director of the agricultural experiment station and professor of agriculture at the Iowa Agricultural college, Ames, Ia. In 1897 he became secretary of agriculture.

MacVeagh for the Treasury.

Franklin MacVeagh, secretary of the treasury, was born on a farm in Chester county, Pennsylvania, graduated from Yale in 1862 and from Columbia Law school in 1864. He began the practice of law in New York city but ill-health forced him to abandon it and in 1865 he went to Chicago and engaged in the wholesale grocery business. In this and other commercial pursuits he has amassed a large fortune. Before entering the cabinet he disposed of his holdings in the big grocery firm and resigned as director of the Commercial National bank of Chicago. Mr. MacVeagh has always been interested in movements for the public welfare, locally and nationally.

Dickinson is War Secretary.

Jacob M. Dickinson of Tennessee and Chicago, the new secretary of war, was born in 1851 at Columbus, Miss. He graduated from the University of Nashville in 1872 and afterward studied law at Columbia college, at the University of Leipsic and in Paris. He served several times by special commission on the supreme bench of Tennessee and was assistant attorney general of the United States in 1895-97.

Postmaster General Hitchcock.

The first cabinet officer selected by Mr. Taft after his election was Frank H. Hitchcock of Massachusetts, who gave up his place as first assistant postmaster general to manage successfully the Taft presidential campaign. He has been given the office of postmaster general in the new cabinet. Mr. Hitchcock was born at Amherst, O., in 1867, and graduated from Harvard in 1891 and from Columbia Law school in 1894. Since 1891 he has been a government official.

Nagel Has Commerce Portfolio.

Missouri has been rewarded for its switch to the Republican column by the appointment of Charles Nagel as secretary of commerce and labor. Mr. Nagel is a leading lawyer of St. Louis and the west. He was born in Texas in 1849, moved to St. Louis when a child and graduated from the St. Louis Law school in 1873. He has been senior member of the law firm of Nagel & Kirby, professor in the St. Louis Law school and a trustee of Washington university. In 1881-83 he was a member of the Missouri house of representatives, and in 1893-97 was president of the St. Louis city council. He is a member of the Republican national committee and for years has been an intimate friend of Mr. Taft. He was one of Mr. Roosevelt's most enthusiastic supporters. As an attorney Mr. Nagel was identified with several important cases dealing with the numerous complications in the affairs of the Five Civilized Tribes in the then Indian territory.

Navy Under Meyer's Charge.

President Taft's secretary of the navy, George Von L. Meyer of Massachusetts, has had wide experience as a business man, legislator, diplomat and cabinet officer. He was born in Boston in 1858 and graduated from Harvard in 1879. He then entered business and has been prominently conected with a number of financial and mercantile concerns. His career as a public official began in 1889, when he was elected to the Boston common council. He then served on the board of aldermen, and in 1892-96 he was a member of the Massachusetts legislature, the last two years being speaker of the house. In 1900 Mr. Meyer was sent to Italy as American ambassador, and in 1905 was transferred to Russia. In January, 1907, President Roosevelt called him home to enter his cabinet as postmaster general. This portfolio he has relinquished for that of the navy. Mr. Meyer's home is Hamilton, Mass.

Ballinger Secretary of Interior.

After about one year's service as commissioner of the general land office, Richard A. Ballinger of Seattle, Wash., has entered the cabinet as secretary of the interior. He is a native of Iowa, having been born in Boonesboro in 1858. After attending the University of Kansas and Washburn college at Topeka, he went to Williams college, graduating in 1884 and afterward studying law and removing to Washington. He was United States court commissioner in 1890-92 and later was judge of the supreme court in Jefferson county, Wash.

Attorney General Wickersham.

George W. Wickersham, who becomes President Taft's attorney general, has had the reputation of being one of the ablest lawyers in New York city. Born in Pittsburg in 1858, he studied civil engineering in Lehigh university and in 1880 graduated from the law school of the University of Pennsylvania. For two years he practiced law in Philadelphia. In 1884 he became associated with the law firm of Strong & Cadwalladare, to which Henry W. Taft, brother of the president, belongs.

ANGERED AT SILENCE OVER SLEUTH'S MURDER

Cables From New York Police Concerning Petrosino's Death Not Answered By the Sicilian Authorities.

New York, March 16.—Though there was an air of quiet activity at police headquarters Sunday, nearly all of the chief officials having been there and in conference, no definite developments regarding the work of tracing the assassins of Lieut. Jos. Petrosino in Palermo, Sicily, were announced.

There was a feeling of chagrin and even of resentment over the fact that not one word regarding the murder of the New York detective had come from the Italian police, despite the fact that a cable had been sent them asking certain information.

Inspector McCafferty, head of the detective service here, made some caustic remarks over the neglect of the Italian police. Said he:

"If an Italian detective sent here on a mission by that government, and working in behalf of the Italian police had been murdered in New York we would have notified the slain man's home department at once. So far as the police of Italy are concerned we have not heard a word of Petrosino's death. I cabled Saturday for information, but have received no answer from Palermo."

The inspector said he was particular to know whether Petrosino had been robbed after being shot. He intimated that Petrosino had some papers valuable to the police here in running down Black Hand and other Italian offenders. The neglect of the Palermo police makes it impossible for the police here to know whether Petrosino had these papers in his pocket when sla'n, and whether the assassins secured them. The inspector said that Petrosino had letters of instruction from the department her which, if stolen by the murderers, would reveal to the Italian criminals just what plans the police of New York have on foot.

To the question whether he thought Italian criminals here had requested confederates in Italy to kill Petrosino in that country, Inspector McCafferty replied that he doubted that theory. Petrosino was constantly in perilous positions in New York, the inspector said, and if the criminals of this country had dared kill him at all they would have done it in this city.

Mrs. Petrosino, the young wife of the murdered detective, is still prostrated at her home here as the result of the tragic death of her husband. For a time, her relatives say, she refused to accept as true the news of Petrosino's death and clung to the hope that it was all a hideous mistake. This hope, it is stated now, has left her.

REJECTION OF MINERS' DEMANDS

Surely Will Be Followed By a Strike, Says Leader.

Philadelphia, March 15.Secretary Hartlein of District No. 5, United Mine Workers, declared Sunday night that he believed there would he a strike of the anthracite miners. He said:

"In my opinion a strike is sure to come. At the conference between the representatives of the operators and the miners the former maintained an attitude which, in my opinion, will cause a strike to be called.

"Every issue which was presented was rejected by the operators. These issues have long been considered by the miners, and they say now that their demands are not unreasonable.

"The rejections of the demands will anger the miners of the union, and I am of the opinion that the result of the convention to be held in Scranton on March 23 will be that the committee will be instructed to again confer with the mine operators and to again present to them the very same demands which they have just rejected. Then unless the demands are granted, which I do not think possible in view of the present attitude of the operators, I am confident a strike will be called."

Says Father Was Hanged By Mob.

Dallas, Tex., March 15.—Fannie Ransey, negress, aged 23, has told a story here that her father, William Ramsey, a minister, was lynched at Rosendale, Mo., on the night of March 8. She claims he visited that place to preach at the invitation of several negroes, and that immediately following the sermon he was taken by a mob of white men and hanged. The next morning a mob burned his body before her eyes. The dead minister and daughter resided in Beamont, Tex.

Murder of Artist May Be Cleared.

Washington, March 15.—The mystery surrounding the murder of Walter F. Schultz, the Chicago artist, whose body with throat cut was found in a field near Alexandria, Va., on March 7, may be cleared up in the arrest Sunday of three negroes charged with the murder. A pawn ticket for a gold watch belonging to Schultz was the clew which led to the arrest.

Mine Owner Robbed.

Salisbury, N. C., March 15.—Walter G. Newman, a wealthy mine owner of New York, who came to North Carolina Saturday for the purpose of paying off the employes of his two gold mines at Old Hill, was robbed of $6,000 and a lot of valuable jewelry.

Took Poison After Killing Wife.

Knobel, Ark., March 15.—After shooting and killing his wife, when she reached the depot here en route to Pickett to enter suit for divorce, E. M. Lake, a farmer, swallowed poison. His body was found near the depot.

WHAT WIFE SAYS "GOES."

But It Sometimes Is Sad for the Painting.

When a property-owner knows nothing about paint it is had for the property-owner, and bad for the painter. It would not be so if the property-owner would always hire a skilled painter, and then really leave everything to him. But the home owner so often fools himself on one or the other of these things.

The skilled painter in every community has some of the most incompetent competitors that ever vexed a conscientious workman or contractor, and the incompetents get jobs generally by working cheap. In the next place, when the skilled painter is hired, they do not leave everything to him, as so many property-owners boast they do.

They interfere most ignorantly and most fatally. They insist sometimes on using paint materials without investigating whether they are good or not. Or perhaps they insist on the painter's hurrying the work.

"I'm not going to have that painter's mess around my house a month," the wife says, and what wife says goes—at the cost of a lot of wasted painting money.

If the painter stays away a few days to allow the paint to thoroughly dry the owner says: "That painter's neglecting this work—guess he's sidetracking me for Jones' work. I won't stand it."

What chance does a painter have to do good work for a man who is continually nagging at him and otherwise handicapping him (without meaning it, of course)? A poor job is the inevitable result of such interference.

Poor painting costs the houseowner money—don't forget that. It might pay you to get the practical paint book, painting specifications and instrument for detecting paint adulterants, which National Lead Co. are offering under the title of House Owner's Painting Outfit No. 49. Address National Lead Co., 1902 Trinity Bldg., New York City. This company do not make paint (they leave that to the painter to do) but they make pure white lead ("Dutch Boy Painter" trademark kind), and they can tell you how to save money by securing durable painting.

Second Thought.

"It cannot he," sighed the maid. "I respect you highly, Mr. Hunter, but we are incompatible."

"Well, I suppose it cannot be helped," the young man replied, pocketing his chagrin and looking about for his hat. "But it defeats all my cherished hopes. I had planned a house, in which I fondly imagined we might be happy. It was to have had a pantry twice as large as the ordinary size, with a roomy closet in which to stow away the new cooking utensils, and things that a woman naturally buys when a peddler comes around."

"Stay, George," she said falteringly, "perhaps I have been too hasty. Give me a day or two to think it over. It is not impossible that—that—"

Ample Reason.

During the trial of a man who had made an unsuccessful attempt at suicide, a lawyer had badgered the witnesses to an exasperating degree, and evidently intended to pursue the same course with a meek appearing little Irishman who next took the stand.

"You say you talked with the accused an hour after his attempt?" the lawyer demanded.

"Oi did," was the direct reply.

"And did he give any reason for attempting to commit suicide?"

"He did, an' it was a good reason."

"Well, and what reason did he give?"

"Sure, an' he said he wanted to kill himself," Pat answered, and for a moment even his honor could not control his laughter.—Harper's Weekly.

What He Lacked.

It is related of a South American general, who was extremely well pleased with himself, that once, when about to sally forth to a grand dance, he surveyed himself contentedly in the mirror, and then soliloquized thus:

"Ah! Thou hast all—bravery, wealth, position, good looks. Ah, what dost thou lack?"

Whereupon his orderly, who, unknown to the general, was close at hand, remarked:

"Sense, general, sense!"

DIDN'T REALIZE

How Injurious Coffee Really Was.

Many persons go on drinking coffee year after year without realizing that it is the cause of many obscure but persistent ailments.

The drug—caffeine—in coffee and tea, is very like uric acid and is often the cause of rheumatic attacks which, when coffee is used habitually, become chronic.

A Washington lady said, recently: "I am sixty-five and have had a good deal of experience with coffee. I consider it very injurious and the cause of many diseases. I am sure it causes decay of teeth in children.

"When I drank coffee I had sick spells and still did not realize that coffee could be so harmful, till about a year ago I had rheumatism in my arms and fingers, got so nervous I could not sleep, and was all run down.

"At last, after finding that medicines did me no good, I decided to quit coffee entirely and try Postum. After using it six months I fully recovered my health beyond all expectations, can sleep sound and my rheumatism is all gone." "There's a Reason."

LABOR FAVORED BY RULING

COURT OF APPEALS MODIFIES BUCK STOVE DECISION.

No Action Taken on Contempt Charges Against Gompers, Mitchell and Morrison.

Washington. — The court of appeals of the District of Columbia yesterday modified and affirmed the opinion of Justice Gould of the supreme court of the District, enjoining the American Federation of Labor, Samuel Gompers and other defendants from publishing in the "We don't patronize" list the name of the Buck Stove and Range Company of St. Louis.

The opinion, which was handed down by Justice Robb, holds that the decree of Judge Gould should be modified to the extent that there should be eliminated from the decree the restriction of the labor organization and the other defendants from "mentioning, writing or referring" to the business of the Buck Stove and Range Company or its customers. Otherwise the decree is affirmed. The court holds that the "combination" and boycott in furtherance thereof and the publication in furtherance of the "We don't patronize" list in aid of the boycott is illegal.

The court held that the defendants could not be restrained from all publications referring to the Buck Stove and Range Company, but only to such as are made in furtherance of an illegal boycott.

In a partial dissenting opinion Chief Justice Shepard took a strong hand in upholding the freedom of the press. He says that even assuming that the publication of the complainants' name in the "we don't patronize" column of the Federationist "was a step in the formation of a conspiracy to coerce independeut dealers into refusing to have further business relations with that company, I cannot agree that the publication can be restrained for that reason.

The chief justice held that "the only remedy for libelous or otherwise malicious, wrongful and injurious publications is by civil action for damages and criminal prosecution. There is no power to restrain the publication."

The decision does not settle the appeal in the contempt proceedings in which Messrs. Gompers, Morrison and Mitchell were given jail sentences. This case will be heard later by the appellate court.

The governor so notified Sheriff Jackson over the telephone.

"I intend to protect the good name of Iowa and of the people of Ottumwa," said Gov. Carroll, "and I will not have it said that a prisoner has to be arraigned by stealth, under cover of darkness, to secure a fair trial.

"If Junken is to be hanged I want it in the legal way and not by a mob."

Gans was far from being the Gans of even two years ago, as he missed several blows, misjudged the distance and failed to take advantage of many opportunities that presented themselves.

Utah's Ex-Treasurer Admits the Theft of State Funds.

Salt Lake City.—James Christiansen, former state treasurer, who retired from office January 1, is under arrest on the charge of being a defaulter to the amount of $70,000.

Christiansen was state treasurer for the four-year term ending at the beginning of the present year. The shortage in the accounts was discovered a few days ago through the checking of the accounts by the state board of examiners. At the time Christiansen was in Nevada where he has extensive mining interests. In response to a telegram apprising him of the discovery he returned to Salt Lake City and admitted his shortage. The amount of the shortage has been deposited to the credit of the state by the bondsmen and friends of the ex-official.

HAVE NEW DEATH MYSTERY.

Dayton Police Believe Body of Woman Is Another Murder Victim.

Dayton, O.—Another baffling mystery confronts the police in the discovery of the body of an unidentified white woman in the canal below the Apple street bridge. In the opinion of the officers, it must have lain in the water about a month. They fear it is another of the baffling murder cases that have thrown the city into a panic.

The woman apparently was 30 years old and well dressed. She was attired in black. She wore Romeo slippers, but over these she had a pair of new rubber shoes. The woman's under garments were in good condition. The decomposition will, it is feared, prevent the identification of the woman.

Six girls have been found slain in Dayton recently. Four of the murders have never been solved.

REPORT SEA FIGHT

MEXICO HEARS SALVADOR AND NICARAGUA ARE AT WAR.

GUNBOATS IN A BATTLE

Diplomatic Relations Broken Off with Zelaya's Country by the United States After Recall of Envoy.

Mexico City.—Ships of Nicaragua and Salvador met in battle Tuesday and it is believed a second clash followed Thursday or Friday.

Three Nicaraguan gunboats, led by the Momotombo, attacked the Salvadoran gunboat Presidente. The latter by a lucky shot put the Momotombo out of action almost at the beginning of the engagement. The three Nicaraguans then withdrew. Later the Momotombo was repaired and went in pursuit of the Presidente.

No word having been received from the Mexican representative in Nicaragua it is thought the cable has been cut.

Washington.—Owing to the continued disturbed conditions in Nicaragua and President Zelaya's failure to make serious efforts looking to the settlement of the Emery claim the state department Friday, by withdrawing Mr. Gregory, the American charge at Managua, and ordering the legation placed in the hands of the consul, who will have no diplomatic capacity, practically broke off diplomatic relations with that country.

Affairs in Central America have been closely watched by the American and Mexican governments, both of which have now come to an understanding that the time has arrived when drastic measures should be enforced to insure peace in the Central American republics.

Ambassador La Barra of Mexico spent some time at the state department in conference with Assistant Secretary Wilson, and the determination was reached that if the American warships now in Nicaraguan waters and those to be sent there are not sufficient to impress President Zelaya that the treaty of peace entered into between the Central American republics is not to be lived up to more radical steps would be taken to accomplish that result. The impression was given that if need be intervention would be resorted to.

The governments of the United States and Mexico, it was stated, are in full accord as to the policy to be pursued toward Nicaragua, and are now anticipating Zelaya's further moves.

So far as could be ascertained no official information has been received here of a reported naval engagement betwen gunboats of Nicaragua and Salvador. As bearing on affairs in Nicaragua the following statement was obtained from official sources:

"Under telegraphic orders issued by the navy department an armored cruiser will remain upon the west coast of Nicaragua pending the arrival of the Yorktown, to take that stand indefinitely, and the Dubuque and Tacoma are proceeding to cruise on the Atlantic coast of Nicaragua and in the neighborhood of Honduras.

The situation at Managua is becoming such that the department has now ordered Mr. Gregory, the charge d'affaires, to return home upon leave of absence, to make a report to the department upon the situation, the legation remaining in charge of the consul, who will have no diplomatic capacity."

BLOOMINGTON, ILL., Feb'y 22, 1909.

I shall very much appreciate space in your paper to make a reply to Mr. E. E. Souther's article under the above caption in a recent issue.

In the first, place permit me to say that I know Mr. Souther and esteem him as a kindly gentleman of excellent character. Nearly every time I go to Kentucky, I see him and am always glad to meet him. In regard to whatever views Mr. Souther may or may not hold relative to the Christian faith, I have no particular interest, except to respect the sincere attempt of any man to follow the light he has.

I number among my friends and acquaintances Catholics, Jews, Unitarians and Christian Scientists, and I am only too glad to grant to every man the right which I myself enjoy holding, namely, the right to think for one's self. But Mr. Souther, unintentionally, I am sure, falls into two or three errors in his article, to which my attention has been called.

Mr. Souther says "the tendency of the time is not towards unifying the church sects but toward a greater and more sharply defined division." Certainly Mr. Souther is in error in this. Is he aware of the great Federal Council of American Churches, embracing all the evangelical bodies of our country which only recently held a great meeting at Philadelphia? The preamble of the Constitution of the Federation reads on this wise: "Whereas, in the providence of God, the time has come when it seems fitting more fully to manifest the essential oneness of the Christian Churches of America in Jesus Christ as the divine Lord and savior and to promote the spirit of fellowship, service and cooperation among them," etc.

In Canada the Methodist and Presbyterians have formed a basis of federation that is accomplishing wonders in the church work. There are are at least seven congregations in Canada where Baptists and Disciples have united, and nearly every reader of the daily press is aware of the fact that the various branches of the Presbyterian church are practically united, and that nearly everywhere this spirit of unity is finding expression. Of course, in the rural districts and in the small towns religious prejudices and denominational rivalries pass away more slowly, but even in such communities a marked difference may be noted in the spirit of now and twenty-five years ago.

Last April the National Congress of Disciples met in the First Christian Church in this city. Among other interesting features we had a magnificent address by Dr. Charles Hastings Dodd, pastor of the most prominent Baptist church in Baltimore, Md. Dr. Dood's address was on "Closer Relations Between Baptists and Disciples." At its conclusion the entire audience arose and sang "Blest Be the Tie that Binds." My friend, Dr. Davis, pastor of the First Baptist church of Bloomington, was present and also made a happy speech. It was indeed a great occasion.

Last November, at Chicago, one session of the Baptists' Congress was given over to the subject of the Union Raptists, Free Baptists and Disciples. Speakers representing all three communions made strong and inspiring speeches, full of the spirit of fraternity.

During my pastorate in Cleveland, Ohio, I saw and felt much of this same tendency to unity and cooperation among the various denominations.

On the Foreign Mission Field denominational walls are much lower than in our land, and it has been often stated by those who know, that Christian Missionaries generally are preaching the simple fundamentals of our common faith, instead of denominational peculiarities.

In view of the fact that even the secular press has freely commented on this present tendency to unification among the churches, it is surprising that Mr. Souther should have overlooked such important data.

Certainly Christians can unite. They are uniting now, and each passing year is bringing the various denominations closer. But Christian unity does not mean Christian uniformity. Many people confuse the two terms. There is room for differences of opinion even among Christians of the same communion. It is not desirable that we should all see alike on thousands of questions, and is certainly not necessary. If we hold to Christ as our spiritual leader and Savior of mankind, the one in whom it pleased the Heavenly Father to reveal his love; if we commit ourselves to his program of life and service, we can afford to disagree about many theoretical philosophies I suppose.

Mr. Souther asks the question, "Why is it necessary have to work [illegible] to get people to accept Christ?" The fact is, that there never was such progress among the churches, or such wonderful evangelistic activity as at the present time.

Here in our city one year ago, in a union revival more than four thousand people were brought to a public acceptance of Christ, and the building where the services were held, although it seated 5,000 people and 1,000 more could find standing room, was not adequate to hold the crowds that came.

Boston, Massachusetts, the great intellectual "hub of the East," has just passed through a marvelous evangelical campaign, under the leadership of Dr. Chapman and Mr. Alexander. The whole city was stirred from one end to the other and thousands of people accepted Christ. In St. Louis last month Gipsy Smith, the celebrated English Evangelist, whose methods are anything but emotional, spoke to 14,000 people each Sunday night in the Coliseum, and thousands of people were turned away. Just now, Mr. Smith is in Kansas City, in the great Convention Hall, and the building will not seat the crowds of people who come to hear him, and thousands are influenced by his preaching for Christian life.

If you will pardon this personal experience, let me say that in the two years and eight months that I have been pastor of the First Christian church in this city, I have received into the congregation between 800 and 900 members, and in three weeks' evangelistic services just closed in which the pastor did the preaching and without any spectacular or emotional features, there were 70 accessions to the church, and on Sundays our commodious building, which seats 1,200 to 1,300 people was crowded to the aisles. And my experience is the experience of many other busy pastors in the cities and larger towns.

The offerings for missionary purposes are unprecedented in the history of the churches of America. The great men's movement in the churches is wonderful to behold. The Presbyterian Brotherhood which is holding this week its convention in the city of Pittsburg with thousands of delegates and great enthusiasm is indicative of the larger interest in church work of robust men.

In my own city here, Mr. Jno. B. Lennon, who is one of the National Officers of the American Federation of Labor is an enthusiastic worker for the brotherhood idea among the churches and goes everywhere to speak on that subject.

It is true that Mr. Taft is a Unitarian but it is a far cry from the Unitarism of Thomas Paine to that of Mr. Taft, Lyman Abbott and others. The fact is, I do not know any of the Unitarians who claim Mr. Paine and if Mr. Souther will read such a good and unbiased authority as the "New International Encyclopaedia" Vol. 15, Pg. 212, article "Thomas Paine," he will find this sentence, "his (Paine's) attack upon the Bible is unscholarly and ignorant, and more to the same effect.

Furthermore, it should be noted that whatever views Mr. Taft may or may not hold in regard to the deity of Christ he is a very reverent and worshipful man. He attends service with his wife at the Episcopal church of which she is a member, frequently and his recent tribute to the foreign missionary and the worth of the missionary cause makes good reading. Moreover, his still more recent address on the values of the various professions and the putting of the Christian ministry at the top of the list is note worthy.

There are all shades of Unitarian beliefs and the word "Unitarian" does not necessarily mean the denial of the unique sonship of Christ though it generally does. In the Arena for November, 1908, Mr. Ernest C. Moses, in writing of the religion of Benjamin Franklin says: "It has been said that at one time he (Franklin) rejected Christianity and the divinity of Christ but this was not so. Franklin only rejected the various disagreeing theories, dogmas and ceremonial systems which were not reconcilable to his deeper sense of rational Christianity." Here is a distinction worth remembering—men can and do reject theological theories and credal statements about Christ without rejecting Him.

Is Christianity dying? Not so! Some of the erroneous ideas about Christ are dying, dogmatic theological statements of a certain type are passing and ought to pass. Various misconceptions of the Bible are passing but the great book itself is being more intelligently understood than ever before. The trouble is that a great many critics of the churches and of Christianity criticize the church of the dark ages and the interpretation of Christ of a hundred years ago rather than of today.

For instance, the old idea of a hell of literal fire and brimstone is not now held I suppose by one tenth of the Christian people, but all of us must acknowledge the principle set forth by those figurative scriptures; this, is the inexorable law of retribution. The natural law of development teaches that he who is unjust is likely to be unjust still, as well as the other truth, that he that is holy will choose to continue in the career of holiness.

The Church and Christianity needs critics. But let us be fair in our criticisms. For after all, the visible church is only what the people are that constitute its membership. And since men are frail and fallible in judgments, mistakes and blunders are made by Christian people and sometimes in the very name of Christ, but fair critics will discriminate between the great truths of Christianity and the mistakes of blundering followers.

Mr. Souther says in his article that Christians are not agreed on any one idea concerning God, or Christ. On the contrary they are agreed on many such ideas.

In conclusion, I wish to state three great fundamental truths that all Christians both Protestant and Catholics are agreed upon.

First, Jehovah the one God whose great father love is revealed in the life and ministry of Jesus Christ.

Second, the leadership of Jesus as the incarnation of the highest good and the perfect ideal life.

Third, The necessity of Christian living, the carrying out in daily life of that great principle of Christ, "not to be ministered unto but to minister.

¼ TO ½ BUTTER LOST THIS WAY

WHICH ?

NO BUTTER LOST THIS WAY

Which way do you skim your milk? It is hard sometimes to realize just how great the loss of cream is with crocks and pans. Some people may not believe that a

U. S.

CREAM SEPARATOR

skims enough closer than the old way to increase their butter yield one-fourth or more. But it does, and there's a plain reason for it. When you set milk the cream and skim milk are separated from one another by the force of gravity, but when you skim milk with a U. S. Separator centrifugal force, which is thousands of times stronger than gravity, does the separating. It squeezes out the last drop of cream. Cream is money—you can't afford to waste it. If you keep three or more cows, it will pay you to buy a U. S. Separator. Come in and look one over, anyway. They are sold by

It Will Not be Toleratad.

This office has been informed that an effort will be made before the conclusion of the Teachers' Popularity Contest to increase the number of the votes of one or more of the contestants, by the present member of a family who is now taking the RECORDER paying up his or her arrears and discontinuing the subscription and some other member of the family then subscribing in order to come in under the head of a new subscriber. This will not be tolerated, and where this effort is made the subscription taking the place of the one discontinued will be allowed only 150 votes. Each of the contestants must be given a square deal, and it is hoped that no effort will be made by anyone to work off any such schemes as the one above referred to.

EASY TO MIX THIS.

Simple Recipe for Kidney or Bladder Trouble or Rheumatism.

What will appear very interesting to many people here is the article taken from a New York daily paper, giving a simple prescription, which is said to be a positive remedy for backache or kidney or bladder derangement, if taken before the stage of Bright's disease:

Fluid Extract Dandelion, one-half ounce; Compound Kargon, one ounce; Compound Syrup Sarsaparilla, three ounces. Shake well in a bottle and take in teaspoonful doses after each meal and again at bedtime.

A well-known druggist here at home, when asked regarding this prescription, stated that the ingredients are all harmless, and can be obtained at a small cost from any good prescription pharmacy, or the mixture would be put up if asked to do so. He further stated that while this prescription is often prescribed in rheumatic afflictions with splendid results, he could see no reason why it would not be a splendid remedy for kidney and urinary troubles and backache as it has a peculiar action upon the kidney structure, cleansing these most important organs and helping them to sift and filter from the blood the foul acids and waste matter which cause sickness and suffering. Those of our readers who suffer can make no mistake in giving it a trial.

The Russell Drowning.

The following is the account of the drowning of Frank Russell as given by the Manchester, Ohio, Signal:

While rafting logs Tuesday afternoon at the Rodgers landing about four miles below Manchester, the skiff which Frank Russell, Jack Yates and Harve Tumbleson were using drifted down against a check line which was holding the raft and the skiff upset, throwing the occupants into the river, which is very deep and swift at this point. Each one scrambled to save his life and paid no attention to the others. Yates managed to swim so close to shore that he caught hold of a limb and pulled himself out of the water. Tumbleson clung to some scantling and was almost frozen from being in the water so long when rescued. Mr. Russell floated down stream clinging to a board, but before assistance could reach him he sank never to be seen again and by the high stage of the river the body may never be recovered. Mr. Russell is employed by Boyd & Co., log and lumber dealers at North Bend below Cincinnati, and has been coming to Manchester off and on for the past six years. He arrived Monday evening from a visit to his family at Ludlow, Ky., and left the Brit hotel Tuesday at noon for his work down the river. No man has ever visited Manchester that is better liked than this gentleman—he was jovial, even tempered, religious and was held in high esteem by all those who knew him, and when he had the occasion to spend Sabbath in town he was always found at Sabbath school and preaching services, being a member of Rev. Cartwright's class of the M. E. church. Mr. Russell was about sixty years of age, a prominent Odd-Fellow, married and is survived by a wife and three grown daughters.

Tomato Crop will be Short.

It seems that the desire to raise a large crop of tobacco this year will cut out the tomato crop to such an extent as to give Kentucky canneries but little to do. Tobacco is a crop that appears to have a peculiar fascination for the farmer and he will cultivate it to the neglect of other crops and the disadvantage of his land in many instances.

Indictments Galore.

At the recent term of the Owen circuit court the grand jury returned 147 indictments, and thereupon it recommended that the jail be given a thorough overhauling. It now looks as though something will be doing at the next term of the Owen circuit court.

A Good Light.

The light plant that H. C. Diers, of Walton, installed in this office, is admired by all who have seen it. It being very simple is one of its greatest features. Every business house in the county should have Mr. Diers install a light plant for it. You need it.

Winn Wants to Win.

Hon. E. E. Winn, of Gallatin county, candidate for Commonwealth's Attorney of this district, was in Burlington, last Friday, getting acquainted with the voters, who he hopes will annex "er" to his name on the 29th day of next April.

Will Raise a Big Crop.

W. H. Hedges, who lives out on the Gunpowder hill tops, was among the callers at this office last Friday. He is one of the large army of farmers who is preparing for a bumper crop of tobacco this year.

B. E. Aylor moved to Covington.

B. E. Aylor, until recently, a citizen of Hebron, this county, called last Friday, and directed the address of his paper changed to 435 Main street, Covington, of which place he is now a citizen.

Saves Fifty Per Cent of the Feed.

A modern method of preserving the green food with all its nutrients and providing its being fed without waste.

The Silo built by the Kalamazoo Co. is the best in use and is composed of seven kinds of wood. It is a large wooden tank that is designed to be filled with the green food in season, and being closed and air tight the food is preserved in its green state, moist and sweet. The Silo is so arranged that the feed can be taken from it without imparing the quality of the balance. The cost of the silo is small considering its saving, and it has the earning capacity of any improvement on the farm. 40 per cent of the nutrients of the corn plant is in the stalks, leaves and husks, and where siloed, stock consume all of it in preference to any other feed.

WHAT A FORMER OREGON FARMER THINKS OF WESTERN CANADA.

Albert Nelson left Benton Co., Oregon, in Sept., 1904, for the great Canadian prairies. To quote from his letter: "I was greatly surprised to find such an immense stretch of rich virgin prairie still almost unoccupied in the very heart of North America. The splendid crops of oats, wheat, barley, potatoes and hay I beheld in the settlements made me very eager for a piece of this rich soil, and I soon located in the Goose Lake country. We have here a great stretch of the rich, deep clay loam of the Saskatchewan—a soil heavy and hard to break, but particularly well adapted for the retention of moisture and production of the bright No. 1 hard wheat, and great crops of oats, barley, flax and potatoes. I had 60 bushels of oats, weighing 441 lb. to the bushel, per acre. Some of my neighbors had still greater yields. Wheat yielded from 20 to 30 bushels per acre. We have all done well here, and I could name many Americans who came here with means to go ahead, who have done big already. For homesteads one has to go further west, but the best prairie can be bought here for from $12.00 to $16.00 per acre. The climate is dry and healthy. This is the regular Saskatchewan fall weather—frosty nights, and bright, sunny days—ideal for threshing and hauling out of wheat. The trails are dusty, as thousands of wheat teams are moving towards the elevators.

"The sight of it makes one stop and wonder what it will be in a few years when the immense prairies get under cultivation. Heavy snowfall is the exception here. Snow generally falls in December and goes off in March. It sometimes gets very cold, but the Saskatchewan farmer does not fear the cold. Winter is his season of rest. The first or second crop he builds a comfortable house for himself, and warm stables for his horses. He need not, like some, be poking about in the mud all winter attending a few beasts for a livelihood."

STANDARD OIL IS VICTOR

WINS FAMOUS $29,240,000 CASE IN FEDERAL COURT.

Judge Anderson Decides Government Has Not Proved Charges and Throws Suit Out of Court.

Chicago.—As forecasted Tuesday, the famous Standard Oil rebating cases in which Judge Landis imposed a fine of $29,240,000 have been thrown out of court.

Judge A. B. Anderson, before whom they came for retrial, after the United States court of appeals had reversed the Landis fine, Wednesday afternoon held that the government had not proved the charges made in the indictment and, following a long argument by District Attorney Sims, ordered the jury to return a verdict of not guilty.

From Washington comes the report that an appeal to the United States circuit court of appeals will be taken from Judge Anderson's decision. This would take the case back to the same court that reversed the Landis decision in an opinion administering a scathing rebuke to the judge.

That Attorney General Wickersham will make every effort to get the case before the United States supreme court for final decision is believed in the capital. District Attorney Sims has not announced what action he will take. He is waiting on instructions from Washington.

The decision rendered by Judge Anderson means that all but two of the pending indictments against the Standard Company are void, and will be abandoned by the government.

The six cases that are affected involve the indictments for shipments over the Chicago & Alton railroad and the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy railway, and the indictments, too, that have to do with the storage charges alleged to have been allowed illegally to the Standard Oil Company by the Lake Shore & Michigan Southern railroad.

It was Judge Landis who directed the case to be taken before Judge Anderson when Judge Bethea declined to hear it after the supreme court of the United States decided to allow the reversal of Judge Landis' decision by the United States circuit court of appeals to stand undisturbed.

The big Standard Oil prosecution had its beginning August 27, 1906. On that date ten indictments were returned by a federal grand jury, charging the Standard Oil Company of Indiana with accepting concessions from railways in shipments of oil from Whiting, Ind. Demurrers to two of these, involving shipments over the Chicago & Eastern Illinois railroad and connecting roads to Grand Junction, Tenn., were quashed shortly after they had been returned. The eight remaining bills were demurred to, but the demurrers were overruled.

Father Ansion of Newark, N. J., Victim of Mysterious Murder.

Newark, N. J.—Three men whose features were concealed by their heavy overcoats and slouch hats walked into the study of Rev. Erasmus Ansion, pastor of the Polish church of St. Stanislaus Wednesday morning and opened fire upon him. Three bullets from their three revolvers hit the priest, killing him instantly.

The trio turned to escape and found their way blocked by Mrs. Antonio Sewrzyska, the housekeeper. Without an instant's hesitation one of the visitors turned his revolver upon her, inflicting a wound which is likely to prove fatal. Then all three rushed out into the street and escaped.

The police rounded up four suspects, and arrested all the former trustees whom the dead priest ousted when he took charge of the parish.

WAGE DEADLOCK IS ON.

Miners and Operators Fail to Reach an Agreement.

Philadelphia.—The conference between the sub-committees of the anthracite mine workers and operators to arrange a new agreement to go into effect at the expiration of the present working arrangement came to an end late Friday afternoon without result.

While the prospects are not as bright as they were for a peaceful settlement, there is still hope that radical action by either side will be avoided. The executive boards Saturday issued a call for a convention of the miners of the three anthracite districts to be held in one of the mining towns to consider plans for further action and then will follow another conference with the operators before March 31.

IRELAND'S SAINTLY SHEPHERD

WHERE ST. PATRICK WORSHIPPED IN HIS YOUTH

THE LITTLE ISLAND OF ST. HONORAT NEAR CANNES, FRANCE, AND ITS TREFOIL SHAPED CHAPEL WHICH SUGGESTED THE EMBLEM OF THE SHAMROCK TO IRELAND'S PATRON SAINT

WHILE I was at home in a vision of the night I saw one who seemed to come from Ireland, bringing innumerable letters. He gave me one of the letters, in which I read, 'The voices of the Irish' . . . and while I read it it seemed to me that I heard the cry of the dwellers by the forest of Foclut, by the Western ocean, calling with one voice to me, 'Come and dwell with us!' My heart was so moved that I awoke, and I give thanks to my God, who, after many years has given to them according to their petition."

Thus wrote Patrick in one of his letters preserved in the ancient book of Armagh, which dates from A. D. 807. In a dream he heard the cry of the dwellers in the forest of Foclut: "Come and dwell with us!" and his thoughts carried him back to the days when he was a captive and a slave in that self-same forest by the Western ocean.

Patrick himself does not tell us the details of his stay in France, as he is hurrying his narrative forward to the time of his mission to Ireland; but there is an abundance of very early testimony in old Gaelic and Latin which makes it certain that he was associated with three great men who at that time dominated the spiritual life of Gaul. The first of these was Saint Martin of Tours, a native of Hungary, son of a tribune in the Roman armies and himself a soldier. Tradition says that Patrick's mother was the sister, or at least a close relative, of Martin of Tours, though his father's family belonged to the north of Britain, close to the rock of Dumbarton on the Clyde.

Another great man with whom Patrick was associated at this time was Saint Germanus of Auxerre. Like Martin, he was of martial origin and of a bold, warlike spirit.

The third great man of Gaul who influenced Patrick in the years of his young manhood—he was 22, he tells us, when he fled from slavery in Ireland—was Honoratus. With his brother Venantius this ardent and aspiring soul had set forth to the east, to give his life to the ascetic devotion and spiritual seclusion which was the ideal of eastern Christendom. On his brother's death he returned and fixed his abode on a little island off the Riviera, within two or three miles of Cannes. Here, with a group of kindred spirits, he established one of those little religious colonies which play so large a part in early European history, and from which so much that was purest and noblest in the life of Europe was destined to come forth.

As in all these colonies, a church was built and made the center of the life of the place. The teacher and his disciples, as always, were their own builders, masons and carpenters. Then they added dwellings and places of study, and soon they were immersed in a life of profound activity, spiritual, intellectual and physical at the same time. To the perfect balance, self-sacrifice and devotion of this life is due much of the spiritual power of the great men who went forth from just such religious settlements as that of Honoratus.

To this settlement among the blue Mediterranean waves Patrick came, and here he studied for many years. From his letters we can form a somewhat precise estimate of what he read. Latin had been his mother tongue; the tongue, in fact, both of his father's family in the Roman colony on the Clyde and of his mother's people, the family of the tribune in the Roman armies. But, Patrick tells us, he had neglected the study of Latin while he was a boy, and had apparently pretty well forgotten it during the six years of his slavery in Ireland, where, however, he learned to speak Irish correctly and even eloquently, as his intercourse with the Celtic princes abundantly shows. In the Isle of Honoratus he took up his Latin studies once again, and attained a fair proficiency in the tongue of Imperial Rome, as his Latin letters show. His style is rugged, sometimes obscure, but always forcible, often eloquent, and with the ring of entire sincerity and genuine faith. Patrick then set himself to read and reread the sacred books, New Testament and Old Testament alike, in the very imperfect Latin versions which preceded the accepted translation of St. Jerome. In his letters he quotes abundantly from many books of the Old Testament.

In this Mediterranean isle Patrick was within the spiritual province conquered by the great Irenaeus, the disciple of Polycarp, the disciple of St. John; and it is noteworthy that we find the followers of Columba, the Apostle of Scotland, likewise claiming spiritual descent from St. John.

A very interesting fact has been pointed out by Mrs. Devenish-Meares. It is that the chapel of Honoratus, in which Patrick worshiped during several years, is dedicated to the Trinity, and is distinguished architecturally by a triple apse, three bays in the eastern end of the chapel, typifying the triune godhead. The eastern end of the chapel floor and ceiling are, therefore, in form like a trefoil or shamrock; and it may well be this familiar building which suggested to Patrick the simile of the shamrock to illustrate the teaching of the trinity. It was in this little chapel on the isle ever since dedicated to St. Honoratus that Patrick prepared himself for his marvelous and fruitful mission to Ireland.

TOUCHED HEART OF MATADOR

Professional Bull Fighter Seen in Unexpectedly Gentle Light.

There is no description of a bull fight in Mrs. Maud Howe Elliott's book "Sun and Shadow in Spain," but there is a record of a meeting with a matador in the studio of the court painter, Don Jose Villegas, and the ensuing conversation, a part of which reveales the bull fighter in an unexpectedly gentle light. It also makes plain the fundamental reason why Americans object to bull fights.

"How many bulls have you killed?" some one asked of the matador.

"In 25 years I have killed 3,500 bulls."

"Were you ever afraid?"

"I have been afraid many, many times. On those occasions I put my trust in my legs and ran as fast as I could.

"The bull, however, is the noblest of animals and the bravest. He never makes a cowardly attack from behind; he is so frank. He is terrible, though; a man needs nerve to face him when he comes into the ring pawing the earth and bellowing."

"Will you tell us about the bull that was the hardest of all to kill?"

The matador's face changed.

"He was a white bull," he said, slowly, "and he didn't want to fight. He followed me about like a little dog. I led him with the cloak wherever I wanted to go. Yes, that was the hardest bull of all to kill."—Youth's Companion.

The Tax of the Insect.

During the year just passed the insects of the country cost the farmers more money than the nation expended on its army and navy, in paying all the claims on its mountainous pension roll and in all expenditures on the Panama canal. C. L. Bartlett, assistant entomologist in charge of experimental field work, has worked out the above statement; and as the value of the crop of the past season approximated eight billion dollars, he estimates ravages of the myriad insect at about 800 million dollars. The sum does not include the loss to cereals and forage crops in storage, nor to natural forests and forest products; the losses from those two sources, at 100 million dollars each, bringing the annual rural insect tax to an even billion dollars.—The World To-day.

Woman's Great Compensation.

Dress is one of the great compensations, or should be, to women for the many disadvantages of their sex. There is nothing that enables us to defy the natural consequences of Time so successfully, provided we give enough attention to the potentialities of, and to the individuality in, dress. It is a duty that women owe to society to make the best of themselves. But a great deal of the success of a gown depends on the degree to which it is in harmony with its surroundings. To be overdressed is worse than being shabbily dressed. However beautiful a frock may be, if it strikes a discordant note with its surroundings much of its beauty will be lost.—The Ladies' Friend.

Clara Morris on Husbands.

It is folly to call the husband the head of the house; he is not, says Clara Morris, the famous actress, in the Housekeeper for October. It is but a courtesy title at best, since in truth, he is but an incident in the home life, while the wife and mother is its whole existence; literally the sun of domestic happiness rises and sets in the face of the wife and mother.

Remedies for Open Cut.

To heal an open cut apply alum water twice a day. Powdered rosin is also good. Pound it well in a clean mortar or wooden bowl. When well pulverized place in a sterilized pepper pot and sift it upon the wound. Put a soft cloth over the cut and occasionally wet it with cold water. This will prevent inflammation and soreness.

CUTICURA CURED HIM.

Eczema Came on Legs and Ankles—Could Not Wear Shoes Because Of Bad Scaling and Itching.

"I have been successfully cured of dry eczema. I was inspecting the removal of noxious weeds from the edge of a river and was constantly in the dust from the weeds. At night I cleansed my limbs but felt a prickly sensation. I paid no attention to it for two years but I noticed a scum on my legs like fish scales. I did not attend to it until it came to be too itchy and sore and began getting two running sores. My ankles were all sore and scabby and I could not wear shoes. I had to use carpet and felt slippers for weeks. I got a cake of the Cuticura Soap and some Cuticura Ointment. In less than ten days I could put on my boots and in less than three weeks I was free from the confounded itching. Capt. George P. "Fight! Mercy me! why did they fight?"

"To decide," said Mary, "which was behaving the best."—Harper's Weekly.

Nehemiah Outdesserts His Foes and Builds Jerusalem's Walls.

BY THE "HIGHWAY AND BYWAY" PREACHER

(Copyright, 1909, by the Author, W. E. Edson.)

Scripture Authority — Nehemiah chapters 3, 4 and 6.

Nehemiah, the Man.—He was the son of Hachaliah, and apparently of the tribe of Judah, since his fathers were buried at Jerusalem, and Hanani, his kinsman, seems to have been of that tribe (1:2; 2:3; 7:2). All that we know certainly concerning this eminent man is contained in the book which bears his name. His autobiography first finds him at Shushan, the winter residence of the kings of Persia, in high office as cupbearer of King Artaxerxes Longimanus. In the twentieth year of the king's reign, B. C. 445, certain Jews, one of whom was a near kinsman of Nehemiah, arrived from Judea, and gave Nehemiah a deplorable account of the state of Jerusalem and of the residents in Judea. He immediately conceived the idea of going to Jerusalem, and having obtained the consent of the king, he made the journey thither. Realizing that the one thing needful was the restoration of the walls of Jerusalem, he set to work with great energy so that the work was completed in 52 days. He reformed the civil and religious condition of the people, enforced economy and justice, restored the temple services, and re-enacted the Mosaic covenant. Nehemiah himself returned to his post in the Persian court, after his sojourn in Judea.

SERMONETTE.

Goodness that takes the fight out of a man when fighting is necessary is not the right brand of goods.

Iron is needed in the blood, as well as goodness, to make a man a tower of strength and the successful champion of a great undertaking.

Nehemiah was such a man.

He had the quality of goodness which made him a reverent and devout man before God and a kindly, helpful man towards his fellow man.

But these gentle characteristics did not prove a weakness when it came to facing the forces of evil. He could be as stern and relentless as he was gentle and good.

He trusted in God, but it was trustfulness which kept his eye on the enemy and his hand on the sword to strike if necessity demanded.

He was such a type of man as God gave to the United States in the person of Washington and Lincoln, and the eulogy which President Roosevelt paid these two great men would apply equally to Nehemiah, when the president said:

"Each possessed all the gentler virtues commonly exhibited by good men who lack rugged strength of character. Each possessed all the strong qualities commonly exhibited by those towering masters of mankind who have too often shown themselves devoid of so much as the understanding of the words by which we signify the qualities of duty, of mercy, of devotion to the right, of lofty disinterestedness in battling for the good of others. Each had lofty ideals, but each in striving to attain those lofty ideals was guided by the soundest common sense. Each possessed inflexible courage in adversity and a soul wholly unspoiled by prosperity."

How true all this is of Nehemiah, who sacrificed the luxury and ease of his palace position that he might become the great emancipator of his people at Jerusalem and lead them forward in that great reform which circled Jerusalem with a wall and the people with new loyalty to God's law.

Goodness is not measured by the length of prayers or the weight of personal virtues, but rather by the dynamic force which is operative in the affairs of men as a result of that religion.

THE STORY.

[F SANBALLAT, the Horonite, and Tobiah, the Ammonite, supposed after that first interview with Nehemiah that he was one they could frighten from his good purposes for Jerusalem, or trap into a compromising alliance with them, they did not with their customary keenness form a correct estimate of the man with whom they had to deal.

These two men were mighty men in the land and up to the coming of Nehemiah had maintained a sway over the city of Jerusalem and the country round it, and it was with ill-concealed hostility that they sought their first interview and took a mental measure of the man who had come all the way from Babylon upon some important mission. They saw that his credentials from the king were all right, and the presence of the king's soldiers prevented them from committing any overt act of violence.

Nehemiah made no response to their menacing words, and Sanballat and Tobiah, taking his silence to mean a recognition of their power, felt satisfied that they could have no further trouble and took their departure.

Nehemiah sat long in meditation. He realized he must act at once, and by his impetuosity and swiftness of action sweep the people into the carrying out of his plans. No time was to be lost.

With this impulse upon him he quietly arose, and swiftly making his way to the place where his trusted servants whom he had brought with him slept, he motioned them to follow and went out into the city. No one saw them depart, and no one knew of their return, so that the secret visit to the ruined wall surrounding the city was not known to any save those who made the midnight journey over the dismal ruins. To a man of less faith and courage the project of rebuilding the walls would have seemed impossible. But not so to Nehemiah.

"God hath put the purpose in my heart to do this thing, and I am not going to turn back now that I have come thus far upon my journey," he muttered to himself as he sank upon his couch after his long weary night of inspection of the ruins, and had returned just as the dim gray light was beginning to creep into the eastern sky.

When God has a great project to execute and has inspired some noble heart to the work, how wonderfully the plans unfold, and the one upon whom the Divine commission rests finds that just at the right time the help he needs is extended. So it was in the case of Nehemiah.

As he lay on the couch there, not to sleep but to lay out a definite working plan that the great purpose of his heart might be realized, he wondered whether he would be able to win the people to undertake the great work. He did not doubt God or himself, but he did doubt the way in which his proposal would appear to the people.

"But I must make a beginning, for without the help of the people we can do nothing," he exclaimed, at last rising resolutely and summoning one of his servants.

In response to the messages which he instructed the servant to deliver there gathered a short time later all the nobles and rulers of the city, together with the priests and the Levites, to whom he frankly and fully unfolded his plans.

"Ye see the distress that we are in," he exclaimed, earnestly; "how Jerusalem lieth waste, and the gates thereof are burned with fire; come, and let us build up the wall of Jerusalem, that we be no more a reproach."

Looks of wonder o'erspread the faces of the men before him. He could read in their expressions how perfectly impossible seemed the project. But he had won their confidence and sympathy in his opening words when he had identified himself with the city and its needs. He made them feel that in spite of the high place he held in the service of the king and the ease and luxury which were his back at Babylon he had voluntarily made the long journey thither, and in all the words of his appeal placed himself as one of them and indicating that he felt the reproach upon Jerusalem—the Zion of the Jews, the beloved city of their nation—as much as did they, perhaps more. For long residence in the presence of the discouraging conditions had developed an attitude of indifference on their part towards them. And so the fact that Nehemiah brought himself right down to the level of their needs impressed them deeply and won their confidence.

But with all the sympathy and confidence which they felt towards Nehemiah, how was the great task which he proposed to be carried out?

"Consider the vastness of the undertaking," exclaimed one of the nobles present, "and think how weak we are in the presence of the strong people among whom we dwell."

"But do you not forget that God is with us in this undertaking?" demanded Nehemiah, confidently.

And he went on to tell them of the tidings which had come to him as he served in the presence of the king, of how Jerusalem was in great distress and the wall broken down. How God had spoken to his heart and had prospered his way.

"The hand of our God was good upon me," he went on to say, "and the king spoke only words of encouragement to me, and as you all well know, I have authority with me to gather such material and such help as we shall need."

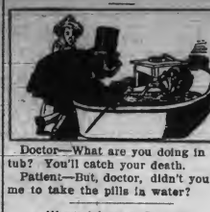
Silence followed the words spoken, but God was working upon the hearts of the men before him.

"Come," exclaimed one of the number, rising and turning an earnest face towards his brethren, "let us rise up and build."

The words were but the expression of every heart present and they arose as one man and eagerly pressed towards the door.

That night Jerusalem was in an uproar of excitement over the announcement that work was to begin upon the walls, and everywhere the nobles and rulers and priests were busy organizing the forces and assigning the portions of the work.

So the work was begun and was being pressed with vigor, when reports were brought to Nehemiah that Sanballat and Tobiah were organizing a force to descend suddenly upon the workers upon the wall, and slay them.



Then did great fear seize hold upon those who labored on the wall, and the work all but ceased, but Nehemiah went among the people and said:

"Be not ye afraid of them: remember the Lord, which is great and terrible, and fight for your brethren, your sons and your daughters, your wives and your houses."

And it came to pass, when Sanballat and Tobiah heard that their plot was known unto Nehemiah and that the Jews were preparing to fight, that they failed to carry out their plan of attack, but nevertheless Nehemiah caused half of those who wrought upon the wall to watch with spears and shields and bows and the habergeons, while the others worked.

So was the wall completed.

It was a proud boast one clergyman made to two or three others who were having a quiet chat in his study the other night—namely, that he had actually on one occasion been asked to make his service, both prayers and sermon, a bit longer.

"Where on earth was that?"

"Well, boys," was the frank confession, "it was with a goal where I acted as chaplain for a short time. The poor beggars dreaded to leave the church for their cells."

Says Country People Should Know of This

A New Drug Compound Which Relieves Constipation and Purifies the System.

It seems certain that the farming class of people will be free from many of the common ills heretofore affecting them as the new drug compound called cascaroyal pills is far more effective and a hundred times cheaper than the table and mineral waters used by the rich. In fact one of these little cascaroyal pills (Blackburn's) is far more effective as a mild blood cleansing physic than a whole bottle of some vile salts or mineral waters and the action is pleasurable, not drastic. This cascaroyal pill does not cause the usual griping, straining and pain which accompany the action of cathartic pills and mineral waters. It is just a new scientific drug compound made from castor oil, cascara, wild lemon, black cherry, sulphur, etc., but being made in large quantities by the Blackburn Products Co., Dept. K, of Dayton, Ohio, it is sold in packages of 15 for 10 cents or 45 for 25 cents, and any druggist can supply the reader. The above firm will gladly send a free package to any one who writes for it. If the reader wants the experience of a pleasurable physic, tonic and blood purifier, write for the free package to day.

These New Towns in the Northwest All Need Men

The big, easy fortunes being made from fruit, farming and stock-raising, are making these towns grow fast. They all need men who know trades—they need you, whether you have money to invest or not.

Never, in the history of America, has the man who works with his hands had such a chance to make money, as is offered in the west today.

You Are Losing Money Every Day You Stay in the East

You would not stay another day in the worn-out East, if you knew even half the truth about the great Pacific Northwest.

Families, who went there penniless 5 years ago, are spending this winter in California. They bought good land at low prices—paid for it gradually—today are independent.

Opportunities are greater now than ever, because the country is more developed.

Ask us on a postal to send you our free book, telling you all about Oregon, Idaho and Washington. We'll also tell you what it costs to go there.

STOMACH DISTRESS.

And all Misery from Indigestion Vanishes Five Minutes Later.

Every family here ought to keep some Diapepsin in the house, as any one of you may have an attack of Indigestion or Stomach trouble at any time, day or night.

This harmless preparation will digest anything you eat and overcome a sour stomach five minutes afterwards.

If your meals don't tempt you, or what little you do eat seems to fill you, or lays like a lump of lead in your stomach, or if you have heart burn, that is a sign of Indigestion.

Ask your Pharmacist for a 50 cent case of Pape's Diapepsin and take one triangule after supper tonight. There will be no sour risings, no belching of undigested food mixed with acid, no stomach gas or heartburn, fullness or heavy feeling in the stomach, Nausea, Debilitating Headaches, Dizziness or Intestinal griping. This will all go, and besides, there will be no sour food left over in the stomach to poison your breath with nauseous odors.

Pape's Diapepsin is a certain cure for all stomach misery, because it will take hold of your food and digest it just the same as if your stomach wasn't there.

Actual, prompt relief for all your stomach misery is at your Pharmacist, waiting for you.

These large 50-cent cases contain more than sufficient to cure a case of Dyspepsia or Indigestion.

Mentioning the name, Weneeda, in one of our items made us think of what some have said to us. We should have named this place "Ineeda" that such a name would have given a hint in a round-about way.

Dr. Hays frequently goes horseback when calling on his patients. The doctor, astride a horse, reminds us of George Washington, only that the doctor's horsemanship and fine appearance is superior to that of Washington. Washington never made a bow to a lady with more ease and grace than the doctor. We know whereof we speak, for we have noticed a few of the doctor's bows.

Crime and the Telephone.

From the beginning to the end of a transaction in crime the telephone comes into use serving both sides with equal fidelity, says a writer in Appleton's. The thief uses it to determine which house he may safely rob. The man next door sees the burglar, and calls up the police. The police arrive, catch the burglar and telephone for the Black Maria to take him to jail. The thief telephones a lawyer to defend him. The lawyer telephones for the bondsman to bail out his client, and the banker telephones the sheriff that the bondsman's check is good. When the day of trial comes, the clerk of the court, being a kind gentleman, telephones to the burglar's lawyer; the sheriff telephones witnesses to be present. When the burglar is convicted and sentenced the sheriff uses long distance to tell the warden of the penitentiary when his prisoner will be delivered. After that the telephone line is kept hot by influential politicians petitioning the governor for a pardon.

Here, girls, listen to what London Society says of you! "The charm of the American girl lies in her beauty and social talents. She is an ideal partner to dance with, to take in to dinner or to sit out a picnic with, and she usually makes an active and successful hostess. But when her husband discovers that she is never happy except when going to parties, is bored in the country unless with a houseful of guests, and is always craving to tear from one fashionable resort to another —no rest, no peace—it is then that trouble comes in." Much London Society knows about it, eh? Granted you are an ideal dancer, a beauty and a charming dinner companion, did you ever "sit out a picnic?" Picnics are believed to be obsolete, as far as the type of girl referred to here is concerned.

A quaint and amusing party, now that fancy balls are in order, was a "Noah's Ark," given in Parisian "high life" several evenings ago by one of the leading mondaines. The guests filed in characters two by two, and as no indication had been given as to how the characters were to be carried out, the result was a huge success. Some of the fair ladies tried to make their impersonations of the animals pretty and coquettish, the effects being most attractive, yet immensely funny, while the men, on the other hand, made their characters as grotesque as possible. As the fun waxed warmer and warmer, the "animals" gave vent in speech to the sounds allotted to them by nature, and the hallroom rang with the lion's roar, the barking of dogs, the cooing of doves and the singing of birds.

A house to cost fifteen or twenty thousand dollars is, in the opinion of the governor of Indiana, good enough for the chief executive of that state. He fixed that limit in expressing his opposition to the proposal to spend a hundred and fifty thousand dollars for a governor's house. No governor on a salary of $8,000 could maintain so expensive a house, and he does not think the state ought to be asked to maintain it. Few of the states provide a house for their governor in the state capital, and most of the governors continue after their election to live in their permanent homes, and go to the capital when business calls them there.

Now has arisen a militant woman to tell other women that men dictate what they shall wear, so that said men may make fortunes through women's weakness. She also suggests that if they stopped buying clothes for six months there would be the worst commercial panic ever. Men may smile indulgently over foolish tirades about masculine marital tyranny and frantic appeals for the ballot, but this sort of thing is serious. Luckily no amount of eloquence, truth, denunciation or any other mortal method will make women stop buying clothes.

Bedouins in Arabia are not pleased with the new railroad which is carrying pilgrims to Mecca by steam, and freeing their caravans from the raids of the desert tribes. The Bedouins recently attacked one station of the road, and were not repulsed for two hours. A train which reached another station found the building destroyed, the telegraph wires cut, the ground covered with blood, and none of the staff of 40 men anywhere about. When the road was opened in September this sort of thing was freely prophesied.

Reports of death and injuries on last Fourth of July have been collected by the Journal of the American Medical Association. The figures, which nevertheless are not complete, show a hundred and sixty-three deaths in the country and more than five thousand injuries from explosives. Remind yourself of this fact on July 1, 1909.

ENGINE RAN WILD

FOUR KILLED; THIRTY INJURED

Accident Caused By Washout Pipe Blowing Out—Among Victims Are Wife, Daughter and Son of Western Railroader.

Montreal, March 18.—Four persons are dead and 30 others were more or less seriously injured as the result of the blowing out of a washout pipe of the locomotive hauling the Boston express, due at the Windsor street station of the Canadian Pacific railway Wednesday morning. Scalding steam filled the cab and the engineer and fireman were forced to jump. The train, without a guiding hand at the throttle, dashed into the station, through the granite wall into the women's waiting room and then into the rotunda, where the locomotive after demolishing one massive granite pillar, was brought to a standstill by another. The four persons killed were sitting in the women's waiting room. They were:

Mrs. W. J. Nixon, Montreal, her 13-year-old son and 9-year-old daughter; Elsie Villiers, 12 years old, of Montreal.

A score of men were knocked down when the train crashed through into the rotunda. The most seriously injured are:

John Gerriepy, Montreal, legs broken; William Anderson, Salvation Army Home, head cut, taken to hospital; unknown foreign farmer, fracture at base of skull, may recover; William Plante, Montreal, fractured ribs; Robert Buckingham, Toronto, scalp wounds; Mrs. A. Goodleaf, Caughnawaga, Quebec, head injured; Miss Cecelle De Lisle, Caubnawaga, head injured; Jonah Wells, Montreal, bruised; William Bock, Canadian Pacific interpreter, legs crushed.

Fireman Craig jumped from the train and landed in a snowdrift uninjured. Engineer Cunningham was found beside the track with his skull fractured and is not expected to live.

The husband of Mrs. W. J. Nixon is a train dispatcher of the Canadian Pacific at Medicine Hat, Alberta. He had secured leave of absence to come to Montreal to get his family, and they were all at the station to greet him after six months' separation. The mangled bodies of his wife and children were lying on the platform when he stepped from the train.

POSTMEN JOIN STRIKERS

And France Is Isolated From Outside World.

Paris, March 18.—The letter carriers have joined the strike of the telegraphers, telephone operators and mail clerks employed by the postoffice department. Eight hundred postmen employed in the delivery of newspapers and parcels, went out, after the last distribution Wednesday night.

Paris is practically isolated from the rest of France, and France from the outside world. Eight thousand strikers met Wednesday night and passed a resolution to maintain the struggle to the bitter end. Premier Clemenceau declares that the government is ready for a fight, and will not recede its determination to force the strikers to the wall.

Troops are held in readiness at Versailles to re-enforce the Paris troops in case any demonstrations of a serious nature occur Thurday, which is a holiday.

There is an alarming rumor late Wednesday night that the secretary of the Railroad Employes' union has promised to order out these men in a sympathetic strike.

SON OF RICH LAWYER ABDUCTED FROM SCHOOL

Ransom of $10,000 Demanded By Kidnapers in a Letter To Boy's Parents.

Sharon, Pa., March 19.—William Whitla, son of James P. Whitla, a well known attorney and former Republican candidate for congress, was kidnaped by two men Thursday and later his parents received a letter demanding a ransom of $10,000.

The boy is a pupil in Room 2 of the East Ward school. About 9:30 o'clock Thursday morning two men drove up to the school in a buggy. One of the men met the janitor and told him William Whitla was wanted at his father's office immediately.

The janitor carried the message to the boy's teacher and the teacher prepared the child for the journey. As she was putting on the child's coat she remarked to the boy:

"I hope they are not kidnaping you."

The boy was taken to the buggy, where he climbed in and took a seat between the two men. That was the last seen of him. The father, James Whitla, was in New Wilmington, Pa., on business.

When the boy failed to return at noon Mrs. Whitla began an investigation, but failed to find any trace of the boy. She went to the school and there learned that the boy had been taken away by two men.

About 1 o'clock Thursday afternoon the postman stopped at the Whitla home and left a letter addressed to the boy's father.

Mrs. Whitla opened it and found that it demanded $10,000 ransom. The letter instructed Mrs. Whitla to advertise where the money could be secured. The police sent out a description of the men and asked the police of near-by towns to cooperate.

Mr. Whitla is a brother-in-law of F. H. Buhl, the millionaire iron manufacturer. The two men who kidnaped young Whitla are said to be Italians.

Harrisburg, Pa., March 19.—The state police department Thursday afternoon received word of the kidnaping of the son of James Whitla, at Sharon, by supposed black hand members, and at once ordered details of men from the troops to recapture the boy if possible.

COOPERS GUILTY

Jury Returns Verdict of Second Degree Murder.

SENTENCED TO 20 YEARS IN PEN

Ex-Sheriff John Sharp, Charged With Being an Accessory, Acquitted—Jury Had Been Out Since Wednesday Morning.

Nashville, Tenn., March 20.—Col. Duncan B. Cooper and his son, Attorney Robin Cooper, charged with the murder of ex Senator E. W. Carmack, in the streets of Nashville, were found guilty of murder in the second degree Saturday morning by the jury, which had been out since Wednesday morning.

After the jury pronounced the verdict, Judge Hart sentenced the Coopers to 20 years each in the state penitentiary.

The same jury Friday morning declared that ex-Sheriff John Sharp, who was charged with being an accessory to the murder, was not guilty, and he was ordered released.

At that time the jurors declared they were hopelessly divided as to the guilt or innocence of the Coopers and that they could not reach a verdict.

Judge Hart, however, ordered them to return to the jury room and take up the case again. The result was that Saturday morning the Coopers were found guilty of murder in the second degree.

The Coopers, father and son, killed ex-Senator Edward Ward Carmack, on the streets of Nashville, because of editorial attacks that had been made upon them in Carmack's paper, the Nashville Tennessean. They declared in their defense that they acted in self-defense, but the jurors thought otherwise.

WATER TANKS BURST.

Two Persons Killed and Many Injured —Property Loss Over $200,000.

Parkersburg, W. Va., March 20.—With a roar resounding for miles around the two water tanks of 1,000,000 gallons capacity each, which supplied this city with water, burst Friday morning and the water, rushing in great torrents in all directions, caused death, destruction and ruin.

The great volume of water swept down the hill, carrying with it houses and all of their contents. It was an irresistible, overwhelming force, carrying with it everything in its path. Houses were swept away as if made of straw, and in many instances dwellings, with their occupants yet sleeping in their beds, were thrust from their foundations, hurled into the streets and twisted and torn as if by a tornado. Two persons were killed and many injured. The property loss will amount to between $200,000 and $250,000.

PLAN TO INSURE PEACE.

South American Presidents Would Avoid Intervention by United States.

Washington, March 20.—Suggestions of a conference of Central American presidents with the idea of removing all possible causes for intervention by the United States and Mexico, contained in dispatches from the City of Mexico, was the subject of gossip at the state department Friday.

It is known that the suggestion came from one of the Central American republics and that it would meet with the approval of both the United States and Mexico.

Information received here makes it plain that while no actual hostilities have broken out in Central America there continues a disquieting alertness and fear of outbreak among the countries there which the United States and Mexico are agreed should be removed.

At the same time they are ready to act promptly in the situation if necessity demands.

DRANK CAROLIC ACID ON THE STREET

Strange Suicide of a Wealthy Pittsburg Woman, Who Suffered From Neuralgia.

Pittsburg, Pa., March 22.—Unable longer to bear the agony she had suffered for years, Mrs. Jennie Moorehead Murdoch, wealthy, a social favorite, and one of the best-known women in the city, drank carbolic acid in Forbes street at noon Sunday and died at Mercy hospital shortly afterward. The act of self destruction was carried out in Forbes street, within a short distance of the Oakland M. E. church, the sole witness being the eight-year-old daughter of E. F. McCafferty, of Atwood street. The child's screams brought dozens of members of the church to the scene, but strangely none of them recognized the sufferer.

After the death the body was removed to the morgue and the name was given out as Laura O'Brien. Subsequently an undertaker took charge of the corpse, but neither he nor the coroner would vouch any information concerning the woman's real identity.

It was these extraordinary precautions that finally led to the identity of the suicide being revealed. The case, savoring of mystery and big possibilities, caused strenuous efforts to be made to learn who the woman was, and finally the secret were revealed.

At midnight, however, it developed that the suicide was Mrs. Murdoch, and it was said the cause was neuralgia, with which she had suffered incessantly for four years.

Mrs. Murdoch was a member of the Shadyside Presbyterian church, and she attended services there Sunday morning, leaving shortly before their conclusion. She was richly attired and when she entered a drug store on Forbes street to purchase the acid no question was asked.

The suicide was the daughter of the late Col. Moorehead, who amassed a large fortune here in the manufacture of steel. She was the mother of Dr. J. Moorehead Murdoch, of the Institution for Feeble Minded Children, Polk; Augustus P. Murdoch, of Oswego, N. Y., and of William Moorehead Murdoch, Cincinnati. She was a member of several clubs, and lived in St. James street, one of the city's aristocratic thoroughfares.

SHERIFF CALLED ON

To Suppress a Riot in Polish Catholic Church at Detroit.

Detroit, Mich., March 22.—Because of a disagreement between Rev. Father Bernard Zmijewski, pastor of St. Florian's Polish church, and half of his parishioners Sunday Sheriff Gaston and a posse of deputies were hurried to the scene in response to a riot call.

The church has been a cause of much trouble to the police. One week ago, so strong was the opposition to Father Zmijewski that he conducted the services almost directly beneath the eyes of a score of big police officers sent there to maintain order.

Sunday's trouble resulted in several broken heads and more or less sacrilege within the walls of the edifice. The disagreement is due to the different ideas of the pastor and his flock as to the manner in which the church affairs should be conducted.

Career Ended By Thrust of Dagger.

Raton, N. M., March 22.—Antonio Dijulio, a coke worker, started out to rid himself of his enemies, and as a result three persons are dead Dijulio attacked his cousin, named Bartole, and shot him in the abdomen. The latter threw open the door of house and fired inside, the bullet lodging in Mrs. Bartole's head, killing her instantly. Enraged at the sight of his wife lying dead, Francisco Bartole plunged a dagger into Dijulio's body, killing him. Bartole died later in the hospital.

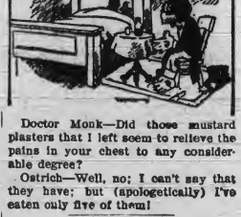
PREVENTING PAINT TROUBLES.



It's easy enough to recognize the symptoms of poor paint, after it has been on awhile—after its inherent tendency to crack and peel and scale and blister, etc., has developed into trouble. You know these paint "diseases" usually indicate adulteration or substitution in the paint materials. And you know the only remedy is repainting.

A little knowledge of paint and painting requirements, and how to made sure of the purity and quality of materials, would prevent all trouble, and save the big extra expense of re-painting; just as a proper knowledge of simple health-laws, and observance of them, prevents sickness.

A complete painting guide, including a book of color schemes, specifications for all kinds of painting work, and an instrument for detecting adulteration in paint materials, with directions for using it, can be had free by writing National Lead Co., 1902 Trinity Bldg., New York, and asking for Houseowner's Painting Outfit No. 49.

A very simple guide in the purchase of white lead (the only sure and safe paint material) is the famous "Dutch Boy Painter" trademark; that trademark is an absolute guarantee of purity and quality.

Doctor Monk—Did those mustard plasters that I left seem to relieve the pains in your chest to any considerable degree?

Humiliation.

A certain small boy of six is rapidly assuming manly ways. Not long ago his "room" at school planned an entertainment. There were to be little songs and recitations and a mysterious grab-bag. The small boy waxed eloquent concerning the coming glories of this show, and more especially the part he would take.

On the morning of the entertainment his mother suggested that he should take his little sister, aged four, with him. He hung his head.

"Don't you want to take her?" his mother asked.

"No, I don't," he answered.

"And why not?"

The reply came quickly.

"'Cause there ain't none of th' other fellers has to bring their children."

Piecing Out the Prayer.

Of curious prayers a writer says: "I have heard a layman utter this petition during the prayer: 'O, Lord, he thou with us in our upsittings an our downrisings'—a variant of the text in the psalms. 'Thou knowest my downsittings and mine uprisings.' A minister occasionally introduced a Latin sentence into his prayer, and forthwith proceeded to translate it. Another minister in his early days experienced considerable difficulty with the long prayer before the sermon. In nonconformist churches this usually occupies a quarter of an hour, but long before this period had been reached he was wound up. On one occasion, while in this dilemma, he startled his hearers with the words: 'And now, O Lord, I will relate unto thee a little anecdote!'"

Aesthetic Lily.

"Here comes my little Lily!" exclaimed a doting mother to a roomful of guests. "I have nurse take her for a walk in the park every afternoon, and you have no idea how rapidly it is developing her sense of the aesthetic—the beautiful! Come here, my darling. Tell us what you remember best about your walk in the park to-day."

Lily's breath came hard. She paused a moment, then answered in a shrill, excited treble:

"Oh, mamma, the bears smelt awful."

LESS MEAT
Advice of Family Physician.

Formerly people thought meat necessary for strength and muscular vigor.

The man who worked hard was supposed to require meat two or three times a day. Science has found out differently.

It is now a common thing for a family physician to order less meat, as in the following letter from a N. Y. man.

"I had suffered for years with dyspepsia and nervousness. My physician advised me to eat less meat and greasy foods generally. I tried several things to take the place of my usual breakfast of chops, fried potatoes, etc., but got no relief until I tried Grape-Nuts food.

"After using Grape-Nuts for the cereal part of my meals for two years, I am now a well man. Grape-Nuts benefited my health far more than the $500.00 worth of medicine I had taken before.

"My wife and children are healthier than they had been for years, and we are a very happy family, largely due to Grape-Nuts.

"We have been so much benefited by Grape-Nuts that it would be ungrateful not to acknowledge it."

BACKACHE IS KIDNEYACHE.

Usually There Are Other Troubles to Prove It.

Pain in the back is pain in the kidneys, in most cases, and it points to the need of a special remedy to relieve and cure the congestion or inflammation of the kidneys that is interfering with their work and causing that pain that makes you say: "Oh, my back."

Thompson Watkins, professional nurse, 420 N. 23d St., Parsons, Kans., says: "For some time I was annoyed with sharp twinges across the small of my back and irregular passages of the kidney secretions. Since using Doan's Kidney Pills I am free from these troubles."

Sir Archibald Geikie, the distinguished geologist, who will probably succeed Lord Rayleigh as president of the Royal society, tells a good story in his capital book of "Scottish Reminiscences."

Disease Cured by Cuticura.

"My six year old daughter had the dreadful disease called hives for two months. She became affected by playing with children who had it. By scratching she caused large sores which were irritating. Her body was a complete sore but it was worse on her arms and back. We employed a physician who left medicine but it did not help her and I tried several remedies but without avail. Seeing the Cuticura Remedies advertised, I thought I would try them. I gave her a hot bath daily with Cuticura Soap and anointed her body with Cuticura Ointment. The first treatment relieved the itching and in a short time the disease disappeared. Mrs. George L. Fridhoff, Warren, Mich., June 30 and July 13, 1908."

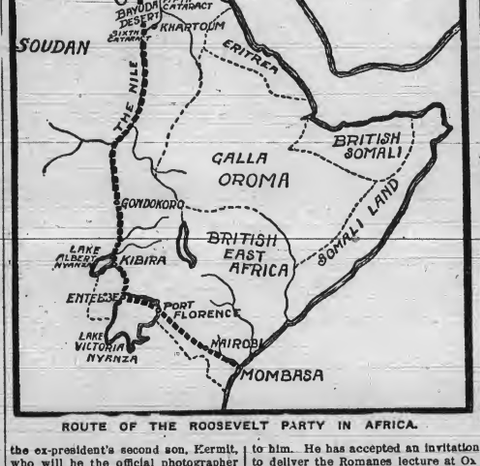
ROOSEVELT OFF FOR GREAT HUNT



EX-PRESIDENT SAILS AWAY TO DARK CONTINENT.

TO BE IN AFRICA A YEAR

Then He Will Travel and Speak in Europe—Three Skilled Naturalists and His Son Kermit Accompany Him.

New York.—Theodore Roosevelt, ex-president of the United States, sailed out of New York harbor Tuesday on the steamer Hamburg of the Hamburg-American line on the way to his much-heralded hunting trip in British East Africa.

On the dock was a large assemblage of Mr. Roosevelt's friends, who had gathered to bid him God-speed, and who cheered him as he stood at the rail of the steamer waving his hand and smiling with delight. Beside him stood the three men selected from hundreds of applicants to accompany him and assist him in collecting the specimens of African fauna which he hopes to send back for the enrichment of the Smithsonian institution. These fortunate individuals were Maj. Edgar A. Mearns, J. Loring Alden and Edmund Heller. They comprise the Smithsonian's expedition. The fifth member of the little party, and not to be considered of least importance, was the ex-president's second son, Kermit, who will be the official photographer of the expedition and, next to his father, the chief hunter.

To Mombasa Via Naples.

Mr. Roosevelt will go via Gibraltar to Naples, where he will board a steamer of the German East African line for Kilindini harbor, the port of Mombasa. At the latter place the party will be joined by R. J. Cunninghame, an Englishman of long experience in Africa, who has been engaged as general manager and guide.

The party will spend a short time in Mombasa and then proceed by train on the Uganda railway to Nairobi, headquarters of the administration of British East Africa Protectorate, a city of 13,514 inhabitants, of whom 579 are Europeans.

On MacMillan's Ranch.

William Northrup MacMillan, formerly of St. Louis, owns a large estate near Nairobi and his big, luxurious farmhouse will be headquarters for about six months while the hunters and scientists make trips of varying length in all directions. It is in this section that Mr. Roosevelt hopes to obtain most of his specimens, for it abounds with animals of all kinds. The smaller mammals will be trapped.

The supplies of the party are packed in tin-lined boxes. These boxes when they have been emptied will be used as packing cases for the various specimens. Many valuable natural history specimens have been spoiled by ants and other insects, it has been found from experience on other expeditions, and it is to guard against this that the tin-lined boxes are being taken along.

Caring for Specimens.

When the specimens have been prepared they will be carefully packed in the boxes and shipped to Nairobi, where they will be forwarded to the United States. One of the taxidermists will always be with Mr. Roosevelt, and as soon as any big game is shot by him it will be skinned and prepared on the spot.

Mr. Roosevelt will be greatly disappointed if he fails to kill several specimens of the white rhinoceros. This animal is the same as the square-mouthed rhinoceros and is the nearest living ally to the type of the extinct Tichorine or woolly rhinoceros which lived in England at the close of the Glacial period.

Journey Across Uganda.

Leaving Nairobi in October, the party will proceed by the Uganda railway to Port Florence, on the shores of Lake Victoria Nyanza, where a short stop will be made; then a steamer will be taken to Entebbe, 150 miles away. There a caravan will be formed and the journey across Uganda to the Nile will be begun. It is expected that the White Nile will be reached about the first of the year 1910. Lake Albert Nyanza will be touched at Kibira.

In a general way the course of the Nile will be followed to Gondokoro and thence to Khartoum. At this city Mr. Roosevelt and Kermit will be joined by Mrs. Roosevelt and they will continue down the Nile slowly to Cairo, visiting many points of interest on the way.

To Speak In European Capitals.

Plans for the remainder of the ex-president's two years' tour have not been decided upon definitely, but the time will be spent in Europe, and several matters of importance have been announced. He will visit Berlin at the invitation of Emperor William and while there will deliver an address upon the one hundredth anniversary of the founding of the University of Berlin.

From Germany he will go to France and deliver an address at the Sorbonne. It has not been learned how long Mr. Roosevelt intends to stay in Berlin and Paris. After his visit in France, Mr. Roosevelt will go to England, where a reception of great warmth undoubtedly will be accorded to him. He has accepted an invitation to deliver the Romanes lecture at Oxford university and in all probability the honorary degree of D. C. L., which Oxford has bestowed on Emperor William, will be conferred on Mr. Roosevelt.

The versatility of Mr. Roosevelt will be shown by the fact that he will speak German in his address before the students of the University of Berlin, French in his lecture at the Sorbonne, and English in delivering the Romanes lecture at Oxford.

Pays His Own Expenses.

Mr. Roosevelt will defray the expenses of himself and his son on the African trip, but those of the scientists and the cost of preparing the specimens and shipping them to America will be paid out of a fund secured for the purpose by the Smithsonian institution.

One of the objects of Mr. Roosevelt in taking this trip is for the purpose of collecting material for writing several books regarding his experiences. During last summer he contracted with Charles Scribner's Sons, of New York giving that firm all the rights for the serial and book-form publication of whatever he might write on his visit to Africa. It is said that the contract price agreed upon is $1 per word, but this never has been verified.

No Slaughter of Animals.

Even if the British colonial government should offer to throw open to Mr. Roosevelt and his companions the African game preserves under its control, the ex-president will refuse to take advantage of this opportunity. Like other true sportsmen, he believes that the utmost protection should be given to wild animals on reservations and that permission to kill them should not be given or accepted under any circumstances unless, possibly, when predatory animals are becoming too numerous.

Moreover, the killing of animals for sport is not the main object of his trip. Mr. Roosevelt hopes to send back to the Smithsonian institution two adult specimens, one of each sex, and a specimen of their young, of animals he meets with on the Dark Continent. Beyond this the killing will be limited to the demands of the commissary.

TAFT MESSAGE SETS A RECORD

PRESIDENT SENDS TARIFF VIEWS TO CONGRESS.

IS SHORTEST DOCUMENT

Adheres to Revision Pledge with Treatise of Less Than 400 Words—Conditions Changed, he Says.

Washington. — When President Taft's personal messenger arrived at the capitol Tuesday, supposedly with the executive message on the tariff question, groans went up from both houses of congress. The congressmen, seeing no evidence of a message, drew the quick conclusion that the president hadn't written it yet and that it was to be postponed for another day.

They knew the message was to be short, but they were thunderstruck when the messenger pulled it out of his vest pocket and laid it before the clerks. It was less than 400 words in length, thus setting a new record for short messages. The messenger had memorized it on the way over from the White House, but owing to the amendment to the old house rules, he was not allowed to recite it, so the clerk read it there.

"Get busy," was sthe theme of the abbreviated document, the president simply telling congress that conditions in the past 12 years had so changed that a revision of the present tariff duties was an absolute necessity. He further called attention to the fact that in the republican convention at Chicago last June, the party had promised to revise the tariff if elected and this must be done.

As President Roosevelt's messages were usually long and as the former occupant of the White House had engaged in a small war with congress, there was a general expression of satisfaction.

Following is the message.

"To the Senate and House of Representatives: I have convened the congress in this extra session in order to enable it to give immediate consideration to the revision of the Dingley tariff act. Conditions affecting production, manufacture and business generally have so changed in the last 12 years as to require a readjustment and revision of the import duties imposed by that act. More than this, the present tariff act, with the other sources of government revenue, does not furnish income enough to pay the authorized expenditures. By July 1st, next, the excess of expenses over receipts for the current fiscal year will equal $100,000,000.

"The successful party in the late election is pledged to a revision of the tariff. The country, and the business community, especially, expect it. The prospect of a change in the rates of import duties always causes a suspension or halt in business because of the uncertainty as to the changes to be made and their effect. It is therefore of the highest importance that the new bill should be agreed upon and passed with as much speed as possible consistent with its due and thorough consideration. For these reasons I have deemed the present to be an extraordinary occasion within the meaning of the constitution, justifying and requiring the calling of an extra session.

"In my inaugural address, I stated in a summary way the principles upon which, in my judgment, the revision of the tariff should proceed, and indicated at least one new source of revenue that might be properly resorted to in order to avoid a future deficit. It is not necessary for me to repeat what I then said.

"I venture to suggest that the vital business interests of the country require that the attention of the congress in this session be chiefly devoted to the consideration of the new tariff bill, and that the less time given to other subjects of legislation in this session, the better for the country.

BOY OUT OF WORK A SUICIDE.

Leaves a Pathetic Note for Little Girl, His Only Friend.

Indianapolis, Ind., Mar. 16.—Guthrie Powers, 19 years old, killed himself in his room by drinking carbolic acid late yesterday. He could not find work. He and the little daughter of the housekeeper were fast friends, and Guthrie left for the child the following note:

"My Dear Little Verna: I am sorry I cannot look into your dear, sweet face again. Honey, good-by. There is no place on earth for me. You are my dearest and only friend. What is life without friends or home?"

Sustains Wisconsin Central Fine.

St. Louis, Mar. 16.—Judge Adams in the United States circuit court of appeals has sustained a decision of the St. Paul federal court, which fined the Wisconsin Central railroad $17,000 for granting rebates of half a cent a bushel on grain shipped by the Spencer Company of Milwaukee.

Train Horse for Taft.

Oklahoma City, Okla., Mar. 16.—A big Oklahoma horse, purchased for the army, is being trained at Fort Reno, Okla., for President Taft.

ROMANTIC TALE OF A CITY.

Begun on Rafts of Tree Trunks in a Lake—Now a Metropolis.

The story of the founding of the City of Mexico is one of the most extraordinary tales in history. It happened in 1325, at least, it began a long time before that, but was an accomplished fact about 600 years ago.

In the first place, says the Rosary Magazine, imagine an almost inaccessible mountain, crowned with a valley at the height of 8,000 feet above the level of the sea. In the center of this valley was an immense lake. When the Aztecs arrived, led by the priests of the God of War, they found it in the possession of hostile tribes.

For that reason, and because the priests declared that in a certain part of the lake where there stood an elevation of stones an eagle had been seen devouring a serpent, they began the construction of the city on this spot, immediately over the deepest waters of the lake. There had long existed a prophecy among the Aztecs that their wanderings would end when they should have reached a place where the priests would behold an eagle resting on a cactus plant, devouring a serpent.

Confident that they had found the spot ordained to be their abiding home, they began to construct rafts of the trunks of trees, covering them with thick layers of earth, upon which they built rude huts of more or less solidity. Groups of dwellings soon began to form themselves in regular order, thus determining the primitive streets of the new city.

They also constructed boats and oars of different sizes useful in peace and war, and while certain of their number occupied themselves in defending their homes and brethren from the onslaughts of hostile tribes, others continued to improve and enlarge the new city. Gradually the lake was filled up, and terraces arose, one after another, in the place once occupied by the deep waters.

This was in itself a herculean labor, unsurpassed in ingenuity and durability by any similar work of ancient or modern times. Upon the first of these terraces was constructed the Teocalli, or sacrificial temple. It was begun in 1216 and not completed until 1325, a period of 109 years, from which time may be dated the official foundation of Tenochtitlan, to day the modern City of Mexico.

Ostrich Farming Profitable.

A new industry which promises great possibilities has been started in Australia. At Nardoo, Coonamble, ostrich farming is meeting with success. There are 120 ostriches on one farm. The firm is using incubators, the same as those used to hatch out the modest product of the domestic hen, only that the egg drawers are made deeper for the purpose, while the temperature for a successful hatch is 102 degrees Fahrenheit. Artificial incubation is preferred to natural. The young ostriches require careful handling for the first month or six weeks of their existence, the one essential being green food, such as lucerne. The value of the feathers produced by each bird a year is $40. They can be plucked at any time after they are large enough, and yield feathers black, white and drab in color. The male bird yields the most valuable feathers.

In the Far West.

Native Maiden—This is such a rude place for you.

Newcomer—Why so?

Native Maid—Because you are such a civil engineer.

Seek Natural Feeding Ground.

Whitefish fry, hatched in the United States hatchery at Kingston, N. Y., when liberated, almost invariably expatriate themselves immediately by swimming to their natural feeding ground, along the northern shore of Lake Ontario.

Foreign Birds in Connecticut.

Sixty-five thousand Hungarian partridges, a bird about twice the size of our quail, have been imported and liberated during the last two years by the Connecticut game commission.

has become essentially necessary in every sphere of business from the private individual to the capitalist. Every good farmer as a rule keeps an account with a bank, and it saves him many dollars, and gives him a better business standing with the public at large. No danger of money being destroyed by fire or lost by robbery when it is in a good bank. Your check given for an account is a positive receip, and a record of it is kept by the bank. The Equitable Bank and Trust Company, at Walton, Boone County, Ky., makes a study of all the public wants in the banking line, and transacts much of its business by mail. It pays interest on time deposits, and takes care of any sized account from a dollar up. Write us if you have anything in our line and we will interest you more than you can imagine.

The Raid a Failure.

Common Schools Closed.

In quite a number of the common school districts in the county, the common school has closed and a spring term is now in progress.

No Grass Growing.

The candidates for the nominations to be made a month hence by the Democrats in this judicial district are letting no grass grow under their feet.

Tariff Schedule Bothering Him.

The local dealer in furs, iron, copper and rubber has been studying the new tariff bill, closely, but as yet he has not made known the effect on his trade he anticipates.

Good Fishing.

The creeks having been full of water for several weeks has given fish a fine opportunity to come up from the river, and the prospect for good fishing in the creeks this year is flattering.

An Interesting Volume.

The RECORDER is in receipt of a copy of "Kentucky Arbor and Bird Day," by Jennie Graff Crabbe, and issued by J. G. Crabbe, State Superintendent of Schools. It is a most interesting volume.

Has Moved.

A. W. Gaines began moving to his new home out on the Florence pike, last Thursday. He will occupy the small frame residence until Mr. Craven and family move to their new home at Constance.

Building up a Good Trade.

N. L. Lancaster, the flour man, was in Burlington, one day last week. He is building up a good sale for the William Tell Flour in Boone and adjoining counties, as a result of handling good goods and doing some hustling.

Fruit O. K.

So far the weather this winter has not interfered with the prospects for this year's crop of fruit, but it may be that the long drought of last year may have some effect in reducing the crop considerably from what it otherwise would have been.

Will Be a Big Court Day.

Next county court day will be the biggest day of the year in Burlington unless the weather interferes with the program for the day. Take court, the horse show and the candidates and they will form a combination that can not be beaten for getting a crowd together.

Young Clover Injured.

Much injury is said to have been done to the young clover by the recent cold spell. Many fields were just beginning to come up and the frost and freeze were disastrous to the young and tender shoots. It will be pretty expensive on those who have to reseow their clover, the price for the seed being over $6 00.

Who Is He?

If a person is allowed to judge from well authenticated reports and the arrangements that appear to be making, the conclusion that one of the most popular widowers in the second magisterial district will take unto himself a wife in the next few days, can not be escaped. The report comes so direct that the RECORDER almost feels justified in calling names and giving particulars.

Not Much Sugar Weather.

There has been very little weather this year calculated to produce a good flow of sugar water.

A Spring Omen.

The game of marbles struck the town good and hard last Friday, and a large number of men and boys indulged in the game.

Some Grazing.

On rocky south hill sides grass has made considerable growth, and where too much stock has not been kept on it, there is pretty good grazing.

That Fish Trap Bridge.

No Tidings Yet.

Nothing pertaining to the body of Frank Russell, who was drowned on 2nd inst. has been heard, although a close watch has been kept along the river for many miles below where he was drowned. His friends very much fear that his body will not be recovered, as the river has fallen considerably since the accident.

Furnishing Farm Teams.

B. B. Hume brought from Vevay, last week, a very likely looking team of Blue Bulls, aged 8 and 9 years, respectively. They were admired greatly by all who saw them, and A. W. Gaines became the owner of them. Mr. Hume has furnished quite a number of the local farmers with teams this year, and is still in that business.

Church Trouble at Erlanger.

The Erlanger Christian church congregation is attracting the attention of the public by a controversy between two factions, which has been carried into the courts. The population of the two has been divided by the trouble, each faction having numerous outsiders in sympathy with it, and in a quiet way "the town is having a hot old time."

Went off into the Ditch.

As M. L. Riddell was coming from the city with a wagon load of merchandise, about eight o'clock last Thursday night, he ran off into a ditch on the side of the pike as he was coming down the hill between John T. Craven's and John Conrad's, on the Burlington and Florence pike, and upset his wagon. Fortunately no damage of any consquence resulted. He had to call to his assistance Messrs. John Conrad and Alonzo Beemon, the nearest residents, who helped him get the goods out of the wagon and to right and reload the vehicle. The remainder of the trip was made without incident.

They Take No Interest.

It is strange how little interest some people take in the condition of the public roads, which they use almost daily. There are many places in the county where large quantities of the best material for building roads lie in a few yards of the public road, which is permitted to become in a very bad condition when a few days work with a wagon and team would make a nice road, and yet rather than donate a few days work to the public, those who are directly interested will permit the material that nature has supplied go to waste, while they travel and haul through mud in which their wagons sink nearly to the axles.

Drag the Roads.

Had the dirt roads been dragged last week it would have put them in excellent condition at once, as they were just right for such work to have its very best effect on them.

In the Swim.

The season has come when the Isaac Walton's dream, at nights, of landing monster fish, which dreams they interpret to mean go fishing the next day, but in fact only signifys you will be in the swim.

About all Have Moved.

There will be but little moving from now on among renters, as they have about all secured homes for this year, and those who had to move have got located and began the year's work. Owing to the difficulty in securing farm labor in the last few years, when a tenant now secures a place the landlord holds on to him so long as it is possible for them to get along.

Waived Examination.

Earl Minor, colored, who was lodged in jail several days ago charged with committing a rape, was taken before County Judge P. E. Cason, last Thursday, for an examining trial, when he waived examination and was recommitted to jail in default of $500 bail. He declined to go into an examining trial because of the absence of one of his witnesses, Henry Osborn, colored, who is working in the city.

The Boone Fair 1909.

Already have the officers of the North Kentucky Agricultural Association begun thinking about the 1909 exhibition, known as the old reliable Boone Fair where everybody who attends gets their money's worth of hightoned entertainment. Of course it is too soon yet to form a correct idea as to the success of the next fair, which will be held August 25, 26, 27 and 28, but no effort will be spared to make it equal to any of the past.

Somewhat "Auld."

Mr. E. A. Arnold, of near Go forth, one of the county's best known and most successful farmers, received last week from his brother, Mr. Charles E. Arnold, register of the U. S. Land Office Department of the Interior, with headquarters at Phoenix, Arizona, a box of archaean white beans which were found in the ruins in one of the ancient cities of Egypt. These beans are known to be one thousand years old and are in all probability several times that old. The beans are much larger than our ordinary poll beans. Mr. Arnold while inclined to the idea that they will not sprout and grow is to make a test of the matter by giving them the most careful attention.—Pendletonian.

The Lexington Leader says that Irish potatoes from Ireland are being sold in that city for the first time in the memory of Lexington's oldest produce merchant, and the cause of this novelty is the remarkably high prices which now prevail for the home grown potatoes. Potatoes in Kentucky at this time of the year are usually worth from 75 to 80 cents a bushel. This year, however, chiefly because of the poor crop last season, potatoes are now selling for $1.15 to $1.20 a bushel. In view of this fact the wholesale produce dealers found that potatoes in Great Britain were so much cheaper than they were here that they could be imported to Lexington and sold at practically the same price as those grown within a mile of the city. There is no tariff on potatoes.

EASY TO MIX THIS.

Simple Recipe for Kidney or Bladder Trouble or Rheumatism.

What will appear very interesting to many people here is the article taken from a New York daily paper, giving a simple prescription, which is said to be a positive remedy for backache or kidney or bladder derangement, if taken before the stage of Bright's disease:

Fluid Extract Dandelion, one-half ounce; Compound Kargon, one ounce; Compound Syrup Sarsaparilla, three ounces. Shake well in a bottle and take in teaspoonful doses after each meal and again at bedtime.

A well known druggist here at home, when asked regarding this prescription, stated that the ingredients are all harmless, and can be obtained at a small cost from any good prescription pharmacy, or the mixture would be put up if asked to do so. He further stated that while this prescription is often prescribed in rheumatic afflictions with splendid results, he could see no reason why it would not be a splendid remedy for kidney and urinary troubles and backache as it has a peculiar action upon the kidney structure, cleansing these most important organs and helping them to sift and filter from the blood the foul acids and waste matter which cause sickness and suffering. Those of our readers who suffer can make no mistake in giving it a trial.

STOMACH DISTRESS.

And all Misery from Indigestion Vanishes Five Minutes Later.

Every family here ought to keep some Diapepsin in the house, as any one of you may have an attack of Indigestion or Stomach trouble at any time, day or night.

This harmless preparation will digest anything you eat and overcome a sour stomach five minutes afterwards.

If your meals don't tempt you, or what little you do eat seems to fill you, or lays like a lump of lead in your stomach, or if you have heartburn, that is a sign of Indigestion.

Ask your Pharmacist for a 50 cent case of Pape's Diapepsin and take one triangle after supper tonight. There will be no sour risings, no belching of undigested food mixed with acid, no stomach gas or heartburn, fullness or heavy feeling in the stomach, Nausea, Debilitating Headaches, Dizziness or Intestinal griping. This will all go, and besides, there will be no sour food left over in the stomach to poison your breath with nauseous odors.

Pape's Diapepsin is a certain cure for all stomach misery, because it will take hold of your food and digest it just the same as if your stomach wasn't there.

Actual, prompt relief for all your stomach misery is at your Pharmacist, waiting for you.

These large 50-cent cases contain more than sufficient to cure a case of Dyspepsia or Indigestion.

A Mean Man.

A Georgia paper tells about the meanest man in the State as follows: "An old farmer living a short distance out of town, in a moment of weakness the other day, blew in 25 cents at a millinery store for a hat for his wife. On returning home he was so overcome with remorse that he went out to the barn and did the hangman act from one of the crossbeams. The hired man happened along just before the curtain dropped on the scene and promptly cut the old miser down. He revived and apparently repented of his rashness. At the end of the month, however, while expressing his appreciation of his employe's act he qualified it by regretting the latter's extravagance in not untying the rope instead of cutting it, and docked the poor fellow the price thereof. The hired man believes that he cheated hell out of the meanest man this side of the asbestos gates."

Finally Died of Old Age.

James Billeter who died in his 82d year at Williamstown, recently, had a record for accidents that is unequaled: "When only 13 years old he was thrown from a horse and had his skull fractured. In 1842 he fell from a wagon and broke a leg. In 1844 he fell from the roof of a two story building, but was caught by his chin on a nail and hung there until his fellow workman procured a ladder and took him down. In 1861 he was bitten by a mad dog. In 1867 he swallowed a live crawfish while drinking from a branch, which lived and gnawed on his vitals for three months before he was able to dislodge it. In 1872 he fell headlong from a four story building, landing on his head in the cellar on a pile of rocks. He recovered but only to be stricken with smallpox a few years later."

Bought a Nice Place.

Last week John Hogan bought of James L. Riley his 29 acres of land on the Bullittsville and Dry Creek Turnpike, near the top of the Constance river hill, the consideration being about $4,000. It is a well improved place and a splendid location. Mr. Hogan will move to it some time next month.

ZION'S TRIUMPH

Nehemiah Dedicates the Walls of Jerusalem.

BY THE "HIGHWAY AND BYWAY" PREACHER

Scripture Authority — Nehemiah chapter 12.

Book of Nehemiah.—It is the latest of all the historical books of the Old Testament. Like the preceding Book of Ezra, it clearly is not all by the same hand. By far the principal portion, indeed, is the work of Nehemiah. The main history contained in the Book of Nehemiah covers about 12 years, viz., from the 20th to the 32nd year of Artaxerxes Longimanus, from B. C. 445 to 433. In respect to language and style the book is very similar to the Chronicles and Ezra. Nehemiah has, it is true, quite his own manner, and certain phrases and modes of expression peculiar to himself. He has also some few words and forms not found elsewhere in Scripture; but the general Hebrew style is exactly that of the books purporting to be of the same age. Some words occur in Chronicles Ezra and Nehemiah, but nowhere else. The text of Nehemiah is generally pure and free from corruption, except in the proper names, in which there is considerable fluctuation in the orthography, both as compared with other parts of the same book and with the same names in other parts of Scripture, and also in numerals. There is no question from it in the New Testament, and it has been comparatively neglected by both Greek and Latin fathers.

SERMONETTE.

If as some of the best Bible scholars believe there was a period of 12 years between the building of the wall of Jerusalem and its dedication, it is evident that the enemies of Nehemiah were able to delay, but not prevent, the final consummation of the splendid mission for which the devout Jew had set himself apart.

We discuss this one uncertain point of the book of Nehemiah in our next week's story. Here we are to consider some of the lessons to be learned.

A stronger and more determined man than Nehemiah might have accepted the long delay and hindrance as evidence that the work had been in vain, after all, and that there was no use struggling against such opposition.

But not so Nehemiah. The faith which had given him the strength to begin the work in the face of seemingly insurmountable obstacles was the same faith which kept him steadfastly looking to the future when the way would open for his return to Jerusalem.

There is no doubt that the enemies of Nehemiah tried to poison the mind of the king with the thought that Nehemiah was building the wall for personal gain, and that he might set himself up in a city and kingdom of his own.

And perhaps during those long years of delay the king was testing Nehemiah out and striving to satisfy his own mind that the charges which had been made against his cupbearer were groundless. And he waited and at last the way opened up and the great dedication day came.

But he who is commissioned of God to the accomplishment of a great work can wait with rare grace, knowing that ultimately the will of God will prevail.

Just as Nehemiah went about the building of the wall so did he go about the dedication. Everything must be done in order and according to the law of his God.

Here again we see the rare grace and strength of the man as he carefully works out the details of all that great ceremony and its accompanying reform in the temple worship. He had no selfish ends to serve, nor pet ideas to carry out. His work was to do God's will.

THE STORY.

"AT LAST!" Nehemiah uttered the words half as a prayer of thanksgiving, and half as an exclamation of surprise. He knew the time was coming when he should return to Jerusalem, but when the word had finally come from the king that he should prepare to return it came almost as a surprise to him.

Twelve years before he had made the journey to Jerusalem, and during two exciting, strenuous months he had labored and caused the people to rear the walls of Jerusalem. More than once during that period had his life been endangered, and many times did it seem that the people would cease the work because of fear of attack. But he had seen the work completed in spite of the obstacles and dangers, and then had come the word from his king summoning him back to the palace.

Troubled in heart he had obeyed, and had resumed his former duties in the presence of the king. By no word which the king spoke to him did he know that he trusted him less than before he had gone to Jerusalem, but somehow he felt that the old cordiality and confidence was lacking. He knew that he had done nothing whereby the king might accuse him, and feeling that there was nothing else for him to do but patiently wait, he continued his services to the king as faithfully as in former times.

So he had continued through the years. How often his heart burned within him to talk with the king about his beloved Jerusalem and his anxiety to see the gates of the city hung and he place made strong against her enemies from without, but he feared to speak lest the king might misunderstand him, and misconstrue his motives.

"It will come out all right," he had reassured himself during those long years of waiting. "Surely, God can bring it to pass. Zion shall yet be restored."

And at last the king had spoken and told him that he should return to Jerusalem and complete his work.

Oh, the joy of that moment. Until then he had not realized how that one ambition had through the years consumed his very being.

"Return to Jerusalem!" he exclaimed half in wonder half in joyous exuberance. "At last! At last!"

Then followed the busy days of preparation, followed by the long journey, and at last the arrival in Jerusalem.

"Nehemiah has returned! Nehemiah has returned!" was the glad cry which rang through the city, and Sanballat and Tobiah were filled with dismay when they heard the news.

Then the king had not believed their report. Their plot had failed, and Nehemiah was present to reckon with them.

Filled with fear, they raised no opposition when the gates were hung and the city made secure.

Not since the city had been stirred with the rebuilding of the wall had there been such excitement throughout the place, and Nehemiah found his hands strengthened by the willing spirit of the people. They were all ready for the dedication of the walls and were impatient for the ceremonies to begin.

"But there must be the preparation," urged Nehemiah. "The God of Israel, who has kept us to this day, and has strengthened our hands in the building of the walls, must be given the praise and the honor and the glory for what has been wrought."

"Let us do so at once," exclaimed the people, eagerly.

"Nay, not so," replied Nehemiah. "There is much to be done ere we dedicate the walls. How about Tobiah to whom hath been given a chamber in the temple?" he demanded, turning to Eliashib, the priest, who had in charge these matters.

In great confusion the priest tried to respond and explain that inasmuch as he was related to the Ammonite he had thought that it would help him to give him place among his people.

"Yea, but what thinks God about it? Shall he who has been as a thorn in he flesh to Jerusalem and who is a stranger to her God and her laws, be suffered to remain to desecrate the house of our God? Let him be cast out at once and the chamber be restored to its rightful service!" demanded Nehemiah. And then without pausing he turned to the chief of the Levites present and commanded that the rest of the tribe should be summoned from the regions whither they had withdrawn themselves owing to the lack of service for them in Jerusalem, "for," exclaimed Nehemiah, "how can we proceed unless the affairs of God's temple be in the hands of those to whom God has consecrated the work?"

So the days passed in the bustle and stir of preparations and Jerusalem began to fill up with those whose services were needed to carry out the elaborate plans of the governor.

At last the great day came. Great gladness filled the hearts of the people, for goodness is contagious and a revival of Godly services always awakens the undercurrent of emotion and sets the heart in tune.

Great was the excitement and imposing was the procession of the priests and Levites as they proceeded with thanksgiving and singing, with cymbals, psalteries, and with harps, to the walls. And Nehemiah with the princes of Judah also came and ascended to the wall, and divided in two great companies as they passed, one in one direction and the other in the other direction, singing as they went. And when they had returned to the temple they offered great sacrifices and rejoiced: for God had made them to rejoice with great joy.

So were the walls of Jerusalem dedicated.

Thus did Zion rejoice in her triumph over those who would have done her harm.

"Surely, God hath wrought mightily," said Nehemiah as he departed to his house.

The Mind of Jesus.

"Let this mind be in you which was also in Christ Jesus," wrote Paul to the Christians of Philippi. The counsel was needed then and is still applicable. The deepest demand of the individual and the multitude is found to consist in the acquirement of the mind of the Master. What Jesus was minded to be and do is in a lesser way to be the form of the life and activity of his followers. Whatever in the world of people is wrong is due to an absence of the mind of Christ, and wherever that Christly purpose and disposition go there follows peace, and joy, and holy living and righteousness is spread abroad to work through all eternity.

The Life of Service.

In this world, the sweetest, deepest, purest joy of life is that which we find in doing good, in serving others. This was Christ's own sweetest joy. He came to earth to serve. He loved, and love's deepest joy always comes in blessing, comforting others. He bequeathed his joy to us, and so we find our holiest joy, as he found his, in serving.

NEW TARIFF BILL IS INTRODUCED IN HOUSE

Measure Would Increase Country's Revenues from Customs to $300,000,000 a Year---Inheritance Tax Planned---Coffee on Free List

Washington. — The ways and means committee of the house has begun consideration of the tariff bill which was introduced Wednesday. The measure as it now stands would increase the country's revenues from customs to $300,000,000 a year.

The senate committee on finance also began informal consideration of the measure. The probabilities are that the house committee will have only one sitting on the bill, that the measure will be reported to the house immediately after it convenes to-day and the debates will begin next Monday.

The measure, which was introduced by Sereno Payne, chairman of the committee, chairman of the ways and means committee provides for an inheritance tax; increased internal revenue tax on cigarettes; a $40,000,000 issue of Panama canal bonds; an increased issue of $150,000,000 in treasury certificates, and the imposition of duties on a maximum and minimum basis. Coffee, hides and iron ore are on the free list; boots and shoes, leather goods, steel and iron products, lumber, wool shoddy, and waste, and the cheaper grades of third-class wool are materially reduced. Tea is taxed eight cents a pound. The internal revenue tax on beer and whisky is not disturbed. Thirty thousand copies will be printed.

No Duty on Coffee.

While there is no duty imposed upon coffee, tea is taxed eight cents when imported from the country where it is produced, and nine cents when from other than the producing country. The internal revenue tax on cigarettes is materially increased, while the tax on beer and whisky is undisturbed. A cut of 50 per cent is made on tea and lumber schedules. Hides, tallow, cottonseed oil, and works of art more than 20 years old are placed on the free list.

The tariff on boots and shoes is reduced 10 per cent. and on other leather manufactures in proportion. The pottery schedule remains about the same, but the duties on window and plate glass of the smaller sizes are increased, while the duties on the larger sizes are reduced. The tariff on wool of the first and second class, used principally in clothing, is not disturbed, but on wool of the third class, known as carpet wool, it is reduced on the cheaper grades.

Duty on Agricultural Products.

Agricultural products schedule: Barley, from 30 cents per bushel to 15 cents; barley malt from 45 cents to 25 cents; cabbages from 3 to 2 cents each; bacon and hams from 5 cents per pound to 4 cents; fresh meat from 2 cents to 1½ cents per pound; lard from 2 cents to 1½ cents; tallow from ¾ of 1 cent per pound to the free list; wool grease from ½ of 1 cent to ¼ of 1 cent; dextrin, burnt starch, and so forth from 2 cents to 1½ cents per pound; peas, green, from 40 cents per bushel to 30 cents per bushel; all starch, except potato starch, from 1¼ cents to 1 cent per pound; sugar, refined, is reduced from 1 95/100 cents to 1 90/100 cents per pound."

Reduction for Wool.

A five cent reduction is made in the duties on shoddy and waste, while wool tops are assessed six cents a pound more than the duty on scoured wool, which is unchanged. The recommendations for placing wood pulp on the free list and reducing the duties on print paper, with certain restrictions, made by the Mann committee of the house, are incorporated in the bill.

The duty on refined sugar is reduced 5.100 of a cent a pound and on dextrin half a cent a pound. A reduction of half a cent a pound is also made in the duty on starch, with the exception of potato starch. Zinc in ore is assessed one cent per pound for the zinc contained. The tariff on pig iron is reduced from $4 to $2.50 per ton.

Where Increases Are Made.

The principal increases are made in the duties on lemons, cocoa and substitutes for coffee, coal-tar, dyes, gloves, and coated papers and lithographic prints.

As was expected, the new tariff bill is made on a maximum and minimum basis, with the provision that the maximum rates are not to go into effect until 60 days after the passage of the bill. Reciprocity provisions are contained in the paragraphs assessing duties on bituminous coal and coke and agricultural implements, by which these articles are given entry free of duty when imported from countries which permit the free importation of these articles from America.

The inheritance tax provision of the bill is similar to the New York state law. It provides a tax of five per cent. on all inheritances over $500 that are collateral inheritances or in which strangers are the legatees. In cases of direct inheritance the taxes prescribed are: On $10,000 to $100,000, one per cent.; on $100,000 to $500,000, two per cent., and on those over $500,000 three per cent. It is estimated that $20,000,000 annually will be derived from this tax.

Ends Foreign Trade Agreements.

The maximum and minimum provision of the bill does away with the necessity of continuing the foreign trade agreements. The abrogation of these is provided for in a section which authorizes the president to issue notices of the termination of these agreements within ten days after the bill goes into effect. The French agreement would therefore terminate immediately, while the German agreement would remain in force for six months.

A provision in the bill is designed to meet the conditions resulting from the patent laws of Great Britain, which requires that patentees must manufacture their articles in Great Britain. This provision applies the same rules to patents taken out in this country by aliens as applied to Americans in the country of the aliens. Drawback privileges are extended by the bill and the method of valuation on articles upon which the tariff imposes an ad valorem duty is broadened for the purpose of preventing the practice of undervaluation.

Payne Explains Bill.

The following explanation of the form of the bill was made by Mr. Payne:

"The new tariff bill is a minimum and maximum tariff bill. The minimum rates of duty are contained in the first section, and the free list for the minimum rates is in the second section of the bill. The third section contains the maximum rates, which are generally equal to the minimum rates and 20 per cent. in addition thereto and the articles on the free list, in the transfer to the third section, bear a duty of 20 per cent. ad valorem as a maximum rate. The maximum rate does not go into effect in any event until 60 days after the passage of the act. By the fourth section the minimum rates are applied to all good terms by way of tariff as that given to any other nation, and the maximum rates are applied to those countries which discriminate against the trade of the United States or fail to give the United States tariff rates as favorable as those given any other nation. This section is self acting, making it the duty of the executive to collect the duties, whether minimum or maximum, in accordance with the terms of the bill, leaving it open to the courts to decide upon the legality of the action.

"One problem that confronted the committee was the question of revenue. The business of all commercial nations has been depressed for nearly two years, and thus has affected our commerce and greatly reduced our revenues, so that we have a large deficit, but the revenues under the present law are improving from month to month, as business conditions are becoming better."

Changes by Payne Bill.

The statement gives the rates in the present law, the Dingley tariff, and shows the changes that the Payne bill proposes. The abstract of the bill continues:

"The committee have transferred some articles from the free list to the dutiable, and have increased duties on others for the sole purpose of increasing the revenue. Most of these articles on which duties have been increased are luxuries which have been increased as follows:

"Perfumeries and toilet articles from 50 to 60 per centum ad valorem; fancy soap, from 15 to 20 cents per pound; chicory root, raw, not dried, from one cent to 2½ cents per pound; roasted from 2½ cents to five cents per pound.

"Cocoa, crude, transferred from the free list to the dutiable, at four cents per pound; prepared or manufactured, increased two cents on each classification except that valued above 35 cents per pound, which remains the same. Ten per centum ad valorem is also added to the duties assessed on that valued between 15 and 35 cents per pound. Powdered cocoa from five to nine cents per pound.

For the Discouraged.

Big things are only little things put together. It is encouraging to think of this when confronted with a big task. Remember that it is only a group of little tasks, any one of which you can easily do.—W. P. Warren.

Boric Acid for Eyes.

Often when one has a cold the eyes feel hot and are red and inflamed. The best way to effect a cure is to bathe the eyes frequently with a solution of boric acid and water.

American Phonographs in China.

American phonograph companies do a big business in China. The most famous Chinese bands and palace singers are engaged to make records. They are brought from all parts of the empire to the three record-making centers—Peking, Changhai and Hongkong. Here the apparatus for making the master records is set up and the recording done under the direction of an expert. A record popular in the north of China seldom is popular in the south.

PROSAIC ENDING OF DREAM.

Nevertheless, Editor Believes It Portends Some Good Luck.

The dream of an unknown Kansas editor:

She was dressed in green, and a serpent of old gold and with red eyes encircled her arm. Her hair was very black and iconc. Her eyes, black and deep, seemed to search me through as she held my hand in hers and looked up from the palm she had been reading.

"Your death will come suddenly," she said.

"Will it be a railroad collision or a hotel fire?" we inquired.

"I cannot say," she said, "but it will be so sudden as to be painless."

Just then we awoke, because somebody was punching us in the ribs and saying: "Get on your side of the bed and let me have my share of the quilts."

But we have been thinking about it since, and we believe somebody is going to pay his subscription in advance. —Kansas City Journal.

Slightly Mixed.

Little Oliver, six years old, had learned the song in which is oft repeated the refrain: "Glory, glory, hallelujah," and for some time he had been singing it with great enthusiasm and vigor. Finally he became silent, and after a brief period of cogitation he said:

"Mamma, what does 'hallelujah' mean?"

As simply as she could his mother explained that it was a religious exclamation meaning "Praise the Lord."

He seemed rather surprised at the information, but his next question offered ample explanation of why he had thrown so much vigor into his singing. "If that's what it means," he said, "why do they throw corn and have jack lanterns on hallelujah night?"

Some Resemblance.

A little girl in a California public school complained to her teacher that a Mexican boy had struck her. The teacher took Joe, the only Mexican boy in the school, sharply to task for the offense, but the boy denied it. "Mary," said the teacher, "Joe says he didn't strike you."

"Oh, no," said Mary, "'twan't Joe; 'twas that 'nother boy over there," and she pointed to the blackest of negro boys in the school.

"But, Mary, that boy isn't a Mexican," said the teacher.

"Well, anyhow," said Mary, "he's very much tanned."

Last Pool of the Longview Tobacco Sold to American Snuff Co. at $4.25 Per Hundred—Prominent Kentuckian Dies.

Hopkinsville, Ky.—The third and last pool of the Longview tobacco, containing 602,000 pounds, was sold by the committee to the American Snuff Co. at the round price of $4.25 per hundred pounds. Heretofore the prices secured have been kept secret, but it is now announced that pool No. 1 sold to Italian Regie, and containing 592,000 pounds, brought $4.14 per hundred. Pool No. 2 sold to Imperial Tobacco Co., and containing 506,000 pounds, brought $6.71 per hundred. Each purchaser has greatly increased the amount after passing the 500,000 mark. The pool originally formed contained 2,000,000 pounds, but was divided into three sections and was sold to the best bidder. The sales were made under the concession granted by General Manager Ewing, of the Planters' Protective association. The prices are thoroughly satisfactory.

Lexington, Ky.—Judge Curtis F. Burnam, 89, died at his home in Richmond. He was assistant secretary of the treasury under Grant and a member of the constitutional convention in 1890. He was state senator many years. He was a graduate of Yale and was a classmate of Taft's father.

Louisville, Ky.—The Seventh Street station, commonly called the "Union depot," used as a Louisville terminus by the Baltimore & Ohio, Illinois Central, Big Four, Southern and Chesapeake & Ohio railroads, was burned. The fire was caused, it is thought, by the crossing of wires in the third floor of the four-story brick building. The loss is estimated at $300,000, without insurance. The train shed was not badly damaged by the fire, and trains will be able to use the terminals.

Hopkinsville, Ky.—The destruction of tobacco plant beds in Christian and Caldwell counties has caused a revival of the "night rider" excitement. Four plant beds on farms of J. T. Walker and Nin Long were destroyed by being sowed with grass seed. Reports from Caldwell county indicate a worse state of affairs for over 50 beds have been ruined there.

Louisville, Ky.—Mrs. Nellie Garrard Cheatham, formerly the wife of Dr. William Cheatham, one of the most noted specialists and physicians of Kentucky and the south, was married to Bruce Hatch, at Williams, Ariz. The bridegroom is in the thirties while the bride is hovering around the half century mark.

Louisville, Ky.—The Louisville Property Co., the holding company of the Louisville & Nashville railroad, and a number of coal mines and other properties, elected Milton H. Smith, president; W. L. Mapother, vice president; J. H. Ellis, secretary; W. W. Thompson, treasurer.

Wilmore, Ky.—The boys' dormitory, dining room and music hall of Asbury college were destroyed by fire while 200 students were at breakfast. The loss is about $60,000, with $22,000 insurance. Asbury was the greatest "holiness" school in America.

Lexington, Ky.—The primary election, at which democratic nominees for county offices are to be chosen, will be held Tuesday, May 4. This date was the unanimous choice of the democratic city and county committee, which met in joint session.

Louisville, Ky.—St. Patrick's day was the date promised for the completion of Louisville's great filter system. President Sebastian Zorn, of the Water Co., announced that in a few days clear water will be running through the mains.

Catlettsburg, Ky.—The Columbia Gas and Electric Co. paid off and discharged the hundred or so Greek laborers who were involved in the riot, in which four of them were shot. The six deputy sheriffs are still on duty at the camp, to prevent any outbreak on the part of the natives, while the Greeks are clearing out. The four wounded foreigners are in the hospital in Catlettsburg, two of them in a most critical condition. Johnson, the man who did the shooting, has not been arrested. This city and Ashland are thronged with the discharged foreigners, who are coming in from the camp.

Paris, Ky.—At his beautiful country home, Castle Comfort, Mr. Frank P. Clay, aged 90 years, died of general debility. Mr. Clay's father, Henry Clay, fought in the war of the revolution, and at its close moved to Kentucky from Virginia.

Louisville, Ky.—At a meeting here of the executive committee of the Synodical Home Missions of the Presbyterian Church in Kentucky much important business was transacted. Rev. Harvey S. Murdock was elected synodical superintendent of the state.

CAPITAL NOTES.

Must Report Promptly.

Claims Humiliation.

A petition asking $3,000 damages was filed here by Carrie Conley, colored, against the Central Kentucky Traction Co. for permitting white passengers to occupy the compartment set apart for negroes on an interurban car, alleging she was humiliated thereby.

On Inspection Tour.

Governor Remains Firm.

In a letter to Rev. Leonard W. Doolan, chairman of the committee of the Anti Saloon League of Kentucky, Gov. Willson once more says that he will not call an extraordinary session of the legislature to consider the county unit bill.

Fined $10,000 for Polluting Creek.

The Indian Refining Co., of Georgetown, must pay a fine of $10,000 for polluting with oil Elkhorn creek, one of the most noted fishing streams in the United States. The Kentucky court of appeals so decides in affirming judgment of Franklin circuit court.

No Troops for Tobacco Growers.

No troops will be sent into the dark patch because of the reported night-rider outrages in that section. The attitude of the state officials this year will be to let the tobacco men settle their difficulties.

To Make Experiments.

Extensive experiments will be conducted this year by the state agricultural department on the farm of Adjt. Gen. Johnston, who notified Commissioner Rankin that he would furnish the seed, the land and the hands if the department would furnish an expert.

One of the Important Duties of Physicians and the Well-Informed of the World is to learn as to the relative standing and reliability of the leading manufacturers of medicinal agents, as the most eminent physicians are the most careful as to the uniform quality and perfect purity of remedies prescribed by them, and it is well known to physicians and the Well-Informed generally that the California Fig Syrup Co., by reason of its correct methods and perfect equipment and the ethical character of its product, has attained to the high standing in scientific and commercial circles which is accorded to successful and reliable houses only, and, therefore, that the name of the Company has become a guarantee of the excellence of its remedy.

TRUTH AND QUALITY

appeal to the Well-Informed in every walk of life and are essential to permanent success and creditable standing, therefore we wish to call the attention of all who would enjoy good health, with its blessings, to the fact that it involves the question of right living with all the term implies. With proper knowledge of what is best each hour of recreation, of enjoyment, of contemplation and of effort may be made to contribute to that end and the use of medicines dispensed with generally to great advantage, but as in many instances a simple, wholesome remedy may be invaluable if taken at the proper time, the California Fig Syrup Co. feels that it is alike important to present truthfully the subject and to supply the one perfect laxative remedy which has won the approval of physicians and the world-wide acceptance of the Well-Informed, because of the excellence of the combination, known to all, and the original method of manufacture, which is known to the California Fig Syrup Co. only.

This valuable remedy has been long and favorably known under the name of—Syrup of Figs—and has attained to world-wide acceptance as the most excellent of family laxatives, and as its pure laxative principles, obtained from Senna, are well known to physicians and the Well-Informed of the world to be the best of natural laxatives, we have adopted the more elaborate name of—Syrup of Figs and Elixir of Senna—as more fully descriptive of the remedy, but doubtless it will always be called for by the shorter name of Syrup of Figs—and to get its beneficial effects always note, when purchasing, the full name of the Company—California Fig Syrup Co.—plainly printed on the front of every package, whether you simply call for—Syrup of Figs—or by the full name—Syrup of Figs and Elixir of Senna—as—Syrup of Figs and Elixir of Senna—is the one laxative remedy manufactured by the California Fig Syrup Co. and the same heretofore known by the name—Syrup of Figs—which has given satisfaction to millions. The genuine is for sale by all leading druggists throughout the United States, in original packages of one size only, the regular price of which is fifty cents per bottle.

Every bottle is sold under the general guarantee of the Company, filed with the Secretary of Agriculture, at Washington, D. C., that the remedy is not adulterated or misbranded within the meaning of the Food and Drugs Act, June 30th, 1906.

The big, easy fortunes being made from fruit, farming and stock-raising, are making these towns grow fast. They all need men who know trades—they need you, whether you have money to invest or not.

Never, in the history of America, has the man who works with his hands had such a chance to make money, as is offered in the west today.

You Are Losing Money Every Day You Stay in the East

You would not stay another day in the worn-out East, if you knew even half the truth about the great Pacific Northwest.

Families, who went there penniless 5 years ago, are spending this winter in California. They bought good land at low prices—paid for it gradually—today are independent.

Opportunities are greater now than ever, because the country is more developed.

Ask us on a postal to send you our free book, telling you all about Oregon, Idaho and Washington. We'll also tell you what it costs to go there.

Sunday morning a horse on the farm of Ed Taylor came near being killed. Quite a number of his horses being turned out together, they commenced kicking and biting one another, and one horse was knocked down and kicked in the head. Dr. H. O. It was a very valuable animal, and everything was done to save its life.

Sunday afternoon, March 21st, at 4 o'clock, a very happy wedding was solemnized at the beautiful country home of Mr. and Mrs. Geo. L. Miller, when Thos M. Black and Mrs. Maggie Carroll were united in the holy bonds of wedlock by Rev. B. W. Nelson, of the M. E. church, in the presence of a few invited guests. The groom is a prosperous farmer of near Big Bone Springs, and the popular bride has been the manager of the merchandise establishment of H. L. Miller at Big Bone Springs. The contracting parties have a host of friends who wish them the greatest of happiness and prosperity. Mr. and Mrs. Black came here Sunday evening, where they were given a handsome reception at the home of Mr. and Mrs. H. L. Miller, and left Monday for Twin Ridge where the groom had a nicely furnished home ready for their occupancy.

The Farmers' Institute held [illegible] Walton Opera House for him to [illegible] last week was continued his [illegible] affairs to Monday [illegible] faithfully as in form [illegible] held here, [illegible] the farming community. The meeting was called to order Thursday morning and D. B. Dobbins of Richwood, was elected chairman, and W. H. Clayton, secretary. Hon. J. G. Tomlin made the address of welcome to which Hon. M. C. Rankin, State Commissioner of Agriculture, Frankfort, responded in an interesting vein. The program as outlined last week was generally carried out, and there was not a dull moment during the institute. Miss Isabella Marshall, who has charge of "Domestic Economy" at the State University, Lexington, made a splendid address on Thursday afternoon on that subject. Prof. Geo. Roberts, of the Experiment Station, Lexington, gave an exhaustive talk on soil fertility that was worth hundreds of dollars to the farmers of this section if they had heard it and applied the principles to practical use. Lowell Roudebush, of New Richmond, Ohio, one of the best lecturers on the platform, arrived Thursday evening, and lectured Friday night on "Gates." It was very entertaining and instructive. During the institute Mr. Roudebush made a number of practical talks that were filled with food for digestion, and would mean an uplift to the farmers if they would but listen and learn. J. G. Tomlin and Jno. L. Vest were untiring in their efforts to make the institute a great success and no persons contributed more to its success than these gentlemen. Hon. J. W. Kennedy and I. H. Voshell, of Union, were both present and Mr. Kennedy made a good talk on tobacco. Many of our local people contributed to the success of the institute, and a farmers' club will be organized to perpetuate the good work. On account of this being a special institute some of the expense had to be paid by the local people, and the following contributed to that end: J. G. Tomlin, J. L. Vest, C. L. Griffith, D. B. Wallace, A. M. Edwards, $2.00 each; H. C. Diers, Jas. W. Cleek, $1.00 each; J. C. Byland, A. W. Smith, E. P. Northcutt, J. M. Stamler, A. Brittenhelm, Geo. W. Ransler, S. L. Edwards, Tom Johnson, Dr. B. K. Menefee, G. J. Grubbs, R. W. Jones, J. W. Cross, J. H. Rogers, T. J. Crowe, James B. Allen, G. M. Allen, 50 cents; Dr. D. M. Bagby, $1.00, Dr. C. G. Menefee, W. N. Holt, [illegible] Moxley, W. C. Moxley, W. E. Vest, Robert R. Snow, Dr. H. C. Black, Glen Crisler, J. C. Hughes, J. C. Bedinger, Rev. D. E. Bedinger, R. O. Hughes, Mrs. G. N. Ranson, J. F. Cleek, Joseph Cleek, J. H. Watson, Robert Chambers, John G. Adams, Carl Neumeister, J. J. Hundson, J. W. Watson, W. O. Rouse, G. B. Powers, Mrs. Sallie Percivall, 25 cents each.

At the close of the Institute Saturday afternoon the cake exhibition and contest took place, and created considerable interest, there being quite a number of cakes on exhibition. Rev. D. E. Bedinger and J. C. Hughes of Richwood, Mrs. I. L. Hopkins of Key West, and Mrs. Eli Cotton of near Walton, were selected as judges. The cakes were numbered so that the identity of the maker was unknown to the judges. It was a difficult task to make the awards as all of the cakes were of such an excellent quality that the contest was very close. The premiums were finally awarded as follows: First premium, Miss Mable Powers; second premium, Mrs. John L. Vest; third premium, Miss Grace Moore. The cakes were then sold and the proceeds amounted to $7.05, which was devoted to the Farmers' Club, which was organized with Jas. W. Cleek as the president, and Jas. B. Allen as secretary. Much good was accomplished by the institute in many ways, and the Farmers' Club will hold periodical sessions with a view to furthering the interests of all connected with agricultural pursuits.

Resolutions of Respect.

We are sorry to chronicle the death of our beloved brother, Frank Russell, who was drowned in the Ohio river, at Manchester, O., March 20, 1909.

Bro. Russell joined this, Venus Lodge 154, in May 1869, and has been a member in good fellowship since.

The mingled tones of sorrow bring us to the sad realization, that the rod has again passed over us and one more dearly beloved brother has succumbed to its inevitable decree, and readmonishes us that all is vanity. That he was a true Odd-Fellow in every virtue that it teaches, we, his associates, have referred to him with pride. In all he was the very embodiment of the many virtues which go to make up our ideal of a true brother, therefore be it

Resolved, That this lodge extend to his wife and his family our deepest sympathies in this their sad affliction.

Resolved, That a memorial page shall be set apart in the record book of this lodge upon which shall be recorded this memorial in honor of his memory, also a copy sent to his family and one to the Boone County RECORDER for publication.

WHICH?

Which way do you skim your milk? It is hard sometimes to realize just how great the loss of cream is with crocks and pans. Some people may not believe that a

U. S.

skims enough closer than the old way to increase their butter yield one-fourth or more. But it does, and there's a plain reason for it. When you set milk the cream and skim milk are separated from one another by the force of gravity, but when you skim milk with a U. S. Separator centrifugal force, which is thousands of times stronger than gravity, does the separating. It squeezes out the last drop of cream. Cream is money—you can't afford to waste it. If you keep three or more cows, it will pay you to buy a U. S. Separator. Come in and look one over, anyway. They are sold by

Let us ever remember that we have but one life to live, and life at best is extremely short. Let us then get all the good we can out of the short existence that is allotted to us. Though we plan for the future, we should remember the present alone is ours, so let every day tell, every day bring forth its harvest of good deeds, for we know not what the morrow may bring forth.

Come Out Again Next Saturday Night.

The entertainment given by the local literary society on last Friday and Saturday nights was a success from every standpoint. Friday night a good sized audience was delighted with Dinah's Quilting Party and My Turn Next, each of which had a particularly strong cast of characters, which brought out the many amusing incidents and complications, that made the plays so enjoyable. On Saturday night Tim Delano was presented, followed by Ebony Flats and Black Sharps. Tim Delano was given a better rendering than that of a few weeks ago when it captured an audience so completely. The cast threw more force into the work, which resulted in a marked improvement at several points. The cast in Ebony Flats and Black Sharps was composed entirly of ladies, and was an innovation which took the large audience by surprise. They had the negro tone and sayings down to perfection, and in an uproar throughout the performance. The jokes were new and humors, while the singing and dancing were great. That the female minstrels made the hit of the season there is no mistake, and the Recorder is sorry space forbids the mention each of the ladies deserves. Miss Maud Hume at the piano, and Messrs. Albert Conner with guitar and Kirb Tanner with violin furnished first-class music each night. At the request of many persons My Turn Next, Tim Dulano and Ebony Flats and Black Sharps, will be given again Saturday night the performance to begin at 8 o'clock promptly—Saturday night, April 3d, 1909.

Boys of the Army "Rookie"

by EDWARD B. CLARK.

THE PYRAMID DRILL

WASHINGTON.—In the last year or two congress has shown a disposition to be generous to the army. Among the other measures passed with a special view to the decreasing of the number of desertions was one which increased materially the pay of enlisted men. The non-commissioned officers particularly were well treated by the bill, for it was the intention to make army life so attractive for the sergeants and the corporals that they would be willing to re-enlist. Then again the amount of pay given the "non-coms" was intended to act as an incentive to the privates to behave themselves well and to stay in the service so that in time they might secure promotion.

There is an army post at Fort Myer close to Arlington, the national cemetery just across the Potomac from the capital. A good many old soldiers are stationed at Fort Myer, men who have enlisted and re-enlisted until the sleeves of their dress coats are pretty well covered with the stripes marking their years of service. These old soldiers tell many stories of the old days when the army life was not as pleasant as it is to-day and when the recruit's lot was far from a happy one. In those old days desertions were many and some of the stories which the veteran regulars tell to-day of the time when they were recruits lets one know readily enough why some men under the old conditions did not care to follow the flag.

TRAINING CAVALRY HORSES TO LIE DOWN AT COMMAND

Here is one story of recruit life in the army 20 years ago that is rewritten with no changes of fact and with only a little change of language from the way that an old soldier told it:

"In the winter of 1888 I was stationed at David's island, New York harbor, a recruiting rendezvous of the army. There were about 800 newly enlisted ones stationed there at that time. The island is a little affair lying fairly low in the water and without any protection from the storms which blow in from the east through Long Island sound.

"January and February, 1888, were months of sunshine, and flowers were peeping on the sunny side of things before anyone could guess whether March was to roar in like the lion or to blent like the lamb. Early in the second week of that March month New York was overwhelmed by a tempest of wind and snow. It was in that storm that Roscoe Conkling met with the exposure which caused the illness leading to his death in a few days. It was the worst storm known to the history of the eastern country. The New Yorkers, however, did not experience its full fury, for their buildings gave them shelter.

"It was left for a few recruits of the United States army, the men on guard, to hear the brunt of the blizzard and to face the elements that gave them battle. On the night of March 11 the storm broke. At nine o'clock the sky over the sound was unclouded, and there was not a whisper of wind over the water. Within ten minutes the black clouds had banked up, and in another ten minutes they were shaking out their burden of snow, while the wind which had sprung to its full strength almost without warning, was roaring down the sound from the Atlantic. At midnight there were great drifts of snow against every obstacle which offered the least resistance to the wind. Out of doors speech was impossible for the blasts tore the words from one's lips and smothered them with their howlings.

"On that night I was on guard as corporal of the first relief. The sergeant of the guard a few moments after midnight stepped from the doorway of the guardhouse and was swept from his feet by the wind. He saw what a terrible night was ahead of us, had already come to us in fact, and he sent a man to the quarters of the officer of the day to ask permission to withdraw the outlying sentinels or to give orders in the case of such shelter as they could find. The officer of the day's quarters were surrounded by evergreen trees, and the officer, looking out, did not comprehend how terrific the storm really was, and so word was passed that the chain of sentinels should not be broken.

"At one o'clock my guard relief was ordered out to relieve the men on post. No man who was on that island that night has in his keeping words strong enough to describe the awful fury of that eastern gale. The combined thunders of 20 mountain storms could not equal the noise of the roaring of the waves as they pounded the shore. The wind added its bellowing to the uproar and its strength almost took away the powers of motion and of speech.

"The relief started from the guardhouse. No man through the darkness brought by night and the tempest could see the outline of his nearest fellow. The whiteness of the snow would have relieved the blackness had not the lashing of the elements blinded the vision. I ordered the men to unfix bayonets because of the danger of cutting one another, and I gave the order passing from one man to the other and fairly hellowing it into their ears. Then the order was given to 'secure arms' and to clasp hands. It was only by the handclasp that one man could tell that he had a companion.

"Into the teeth of the tempest we edged our way. Twice within 50 yards of the guardhouse the little squad was thrown from its feet. All sense of direction was lost and nothing but a collision with one of the low-lying barracks buildings after ten minutes' toiling progress gave the little command knowledge of its whereabouts. A half frozen sentinel whose post luckily was under the lee of the barracks, was relieved and took his place at the rear of the hand-clasping column.

"The hospital of the garrison stands, or did stand at that time, at the extreme east end of the island. Back of it along the stretch of beach runs a sentry's post. A man walking there and looking straight eastward finds no land upon which his eye may rest. That night the lashing fury of the waves was spent mainly on that lonely sentry beach. The first relief managed to reach the front of the hospital which gave some protection. I ordered all the men except the one who was to relieve the sentry on the beach to huddle under the piazza while I took the relieving recruit to find the man on post.

"We rounded the end of the hospital. The blast threw us down. The wind was tearing down the sound and the salt spray and the snow commingled dashed into our faces. We dragged our rifles and edged our way through a wall of wind. A few feet of progress and the blast again threw our feet from under us. Holding hands we crawled digging our free hands and our knees into the ground until we reached a point where the waves stopped our progress.

"Thence we turned by the flank and toiled along the sand for the entire length of the sentry's beat, but no sentry could I raised my voice and shouted. The man within two feet of me did not know that I had uttered a word. Back over the sand we went through the bowling and the lashing. We lost our bearings and ran into an obstruction. I traced its outline and knew what it was. It was the hospital morgue, a wooden structure not more than 15 feet square. We crawled around it until we had reached the west side, where the shelter gave us breath; from the doorway of the morgue came a challenge that even the noise of the storm could not smother—'Who comes there?'

"The answer, 'Relief,' was yelled back by two voices in unison, and we crawled into the dead house. There, standing guard in the grewsome place, was a colored lad, only four weeks a soldier, and within touch of his hand, resting on its zinc bier, was the corpse of a man.

"Driven by the storm to seek shelter, that black recruit, rather than leave his post to get the protection afforded by the hospital, had chosen in the blackness of midnight, and with wind and wave raging without, to take up his watch by the dead, because the place where the body lay was on his post, which he was under orders not to desert."

Two army deserters convinced a certain raw recruit that there was something more than words in the saying he had once heard to the effect that republics always are ungrateful. It fell on this wise:

The recruit had marched on guard for the first time. The sergeant in charge turned two prisoners over to him with instructions to guard them while they drove a mule team and collected the garbage from the barrels in the rear of the quarters. It was the dead of winter, and for the first time in years the channel between David's island and the town of New Rochelle was frozen over.

The recruit plodded along after his prisoners, but, being green to such work, he kept close at their heels instead of trailing along at a distance of five paces as he should have done.

Guard and prisoners reached a point near the shore directly in the rear of the commanding officer's quarters. There one of the deserters seized an empty garbage barrel and an opportunity at the same instant. He threw the barrel over the sentinel's head like a candle snuffer and tore his "Springfield" from his hand.

Then the garbage barrel was removed and the recruit was threatened with death if he made an outcry. He was forced to march at the bayonet's point to the shore of the island and then to run over the ice toward the main land with his former prisoners at his heels.

When the deserters and their victim arrived near the New Rochelle shore a hole was chipped in the ice by means of the bayonet and the rifle was dropped through into the waters of the sound. Then the recruit was told that if he chose he might return to the garrison. He told his former charges that he preferred to throw in his lot with them, for if he went back he would be certain to get a heavy dose of the guardhouse for neglect of duty in suffering his prisoners to escape, and for the loss of government property in the shape of the Springfield rifle which was now at the bottom of the sound.

The deserters told the recruit that he could come with them if he chose, and they started for a saloon in the outskirts of the town, a place known to them, there to wait until it was time to go under cover to the depot to take a train which made no stop for many miles beyond the place of boarding.

"AT EASE"

About an hour before the train was due the recruit told the deserters that he had "weakened" and that he would go back to the island to "take his medicine." They offered no objection and their companion started for the shore while they took a back road to the depot.

The recruit had soldier-making stuff in him. He had been maturing a plan all the time that he had been in the saloon. The deserters once out of sight, he made for a farm house, told his story hurriedly, secured a horse and rode at a cavalry pace for a hamlet a few miles east of New Rochelle. He was afraid to go to the depot to which the deserters had gone because he feared that they would see him and, suspecting his motive, would take to the woods.

At the little village to which he had gone headlong on his horse, he secured the services of a constable readily enough—for there was a reward for the arrest of deserters—and by telling his story and by threatening the station master with all the penalties possible of infliction by the federal government, the recruit induced him to flag the train.

The deserters were caught, handcuffed and sent back to the island.

The board deliberated long if not wisely, and finally reached the conclusion that the country's treasury could not well bear the burden of the loss of the money represented by the price of one rifle, and so it was decreed that the cost of the weapon should be taken out of the pay of the recruit who had done his duty by the government and had showed pluck and understanding, even if he had lost a rifle.

There was a disgusted young soldier on David's island. He was not made of the stuff of deserters, but desert he did. The channel was still frozen and the morning after he learned of the order stopping his pay there was one soldier less to answer "Here," at reveille roll call.

A LITTLE KNOWLEDGE

Of Painting Requirements Will Save Much Expense.

When one sees the surface of a house or other building scaling, or peeling, or spotted or blistered, or showing other symptoms of paint "disease," it is evident that a poor painter has been on the job, and that poor paint was used—or possibly that a good painter had been dominated by a property-owner who knew nothing about paint.

It is an easy matter to be informed on paint and painting. A complete painting guide, including a book of color schemes, either for exterior of interior—specifications for all kinds of painting,—and an instrument for detecting adulteration in paint material, with directions for using it, may be had free by writing National Lead Company, 1902 Trinity Bldg., New York City, and asking for House-owner's Painting Outfit No. 49.

Then, every houseowner should make it a point to get only well-known reliable brands in buying his materials. Pure white lead is especially important, or the paint will not prove satisfactory. The famous "Dutch Boy Painter" trademark of National Lead Company, the largest makers of pure white lead, is an absolute guarantee of the purity and quality of the white lead sold under it. That trademark is a safeguard against saint trouble.

Eczema on Hand, Arms, Legs and Face—It Was Something Terrible.

Complete Cure by Cuticura.

"About fifteen or eighteen years ago eczema developed on top of my hand. It burned and itched so much that I was compelled to show it to a doctor. He pronounced it ringworm. After trying his different remedies the disease increased and went up my arms and to my legs and finally on my face. The burning was something terrible. I went to another doctor who had the reputation of being the best in town. He told me it was eczema. His medicine checked the advance of the disease, but no further. I finally concluded to try the Cuticura Remedies and found relief in the first trial. I continued until I was completely cured from the disease, and I have not been troubled since. C. WAS WRONG IN LAW

CONDEMNATION OF EX-PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT'S ACTION.

Chief Executive Had No Right or Authority to Sanction the Amalgamation of the Two Great Steel Companies.

Seven members of the judiciary committee of the senate have signed a report declaring that the president acted without authority of law when he sanctioned the absorption of the Tennessee Coal and Iron Company by the steel trust. It is also held by these senators that the merger was in violation of the Sherman anti-trust law. Senator Nelson, one of the signers, expresses the opinion that the president may have been misled by officers of the steel trust—a very charitable view, which, however, we are disposed to think the true one. The last thing that the president wanted was a panic. It would have had a bad effect on his party's fortunes, and might have brought with it the defeat of its candidate last year.

It was also insisted that the trust did not really want the Tennessee property, though it was willing to take it for the sake of helping out others who were in difficulty and of preventing a panic. Mr. Roosevelt accepted all these assurances in his usual impetuous way, without investigating the situation. The program seemed to be both philanthropic and patriotic. Certainly that is the light in which it presented itself to Mr. Roosevelt, as his own statement of the case makes clear. There was a time when the steel trust people did care nothing about the Tennessee Coal and Iron Company—would not have turned over their hands to possess it. They had all the ore and coal they needed and had, with their allies, a monopoly of rail-making. But a few years ago there were many railroad accidents due to broken rails. Naturally the officers of the roads began to demand better rails. It had been supposed that there could be nothing better than the bessemer product, which was in almost universal use.

When the roads began to call for open-hearth rails it was found that the Tennessee Coal and Iron Company was equipped with an open-hearth plant, as the steel trust was not. We believe it to be the fact that Harriman had given a large order for rails to the Tennessee company. Here then was a chance to get an up-to-date open-hearth plant, together with millions of dollars' worth of rich ore, for the nominal sum of $30,000,000, of which only a few thousands were paid in cash. We cannot think the trust had any great reluctance to take over this property—cannot think that its sole motive for doing so was the desire to prevent a panic. As a result of the action permitted by the president the trust is fortified in its position and a great competitor is wiped out. That is something that will be greatly regretted.

Whether the deal was in violation of law we do not know. A majority of the senate's judiciary committee so decides. But whether it was or not, the president went beyond his powers. He had no right to license an illegal action, and no power to make an illegal act legal. But more than that, it was not for him to say whether the action was either legal or illegal. If it was legal his sanction was not needed. If it was illegal that sanction should not have been given. When, therefore, Gary and Frick came to him to get his views on the question, they should have been informed that it was one which the president could not even consider, one that should not have been brought before him. It is not within the province of the president or the attorney general to advise the private citizen as to his legal rights. He must act at his peril, and in the light of such advice as his counsel may furnish. The government does not maintain a legal department for any such purpose as this. This, it seems to us, is the great mistake that the ex-president made. He would have been wrong even had there been no doubt of the lawfulness of the action that the steel people desired to take.—Indianapolis News.

The Sugar Trust Decision.

The verdict against the sugar trust, under which it must pay to the government $134,000 for duties out of which it defrauded the customs officers of New York, is decidedly interesting.

The case rested on proof that agents of the trust had tampered with government scales to secure short weight. The judgment stamps the sugar monopoly as the meanest small-potatoes trust in the country.

Tariff protection is certainly not deserved by any industry that will descend to such petty swindling.

Speed the Parting President.

No man of eminence, conspicuous as Washington in the service of his countrymen, has ever escaped criticism. But there seems to be a very faint "parallel," if any at all, between Washington and Roosevelt in this respect, despite our president's discovery. A comparatively small number of individuals censured Washington. In Mr. Roosevelt's case the dominant sentiment of the nation and of his own party is plainly one of satisfaction at his retirement from public office.—Baltimore Sun.

There is a suspicion that when it has revised the tariff congress will pass a law providing for the appointment of a commission of tariff experts to be paid $5,000 each per year for sitting around and being expert.

OUR LARGEST NATIONAL TAX.

Relation of the Tariff to Cost of Living Pointed Out.

In the fiscal year of 1906-7 the tariff yielded one-half of our national revenue, amounting to $333,000,000. Every dollar of it was indirect taxation.

Suppose we call the average tariff tax of this and succeeding years $350,000,000. Who pays it? It is felt in every line of industry. It reaches down to the humblest wage earner as well as up to the millionaire.

But the wage earner pays vastly more of this tariff tax, in proportion to his individual wealth, than the average millionaire. In average cases he pays out most of his hard-earned dollars for life's barest necessities. The average millionaire lives on the fruit of other men's industry, and hence is not the real wealth producer. And he is taxed no more, in proportion to his wealth, for what he actually consumes, than his butler or his footman.

The tariff, in theory, favorably affects the rate of wages. But it also influences the cost of living. When it raises the cost of living it lessens the purchasing power of wages.

Therefore the tariff is a two-edged sword. What little advantage it may give to labor, in shutting out foreign competition, it may take away on the rebound and more. Its last blow may fall the hardest, cutting into the scanty incomes of wage earners by an artificial cost of living.

The tariff is a friend of the tax dodger. It enables him to escape his just share of the expenses of the national government. But the poor man cannot dodge taxes. He not only pays on his humble house and lot, or his meager personal belongings, but pays to the limit also in indirect tariff taxes.

Many tariff overlords, with their families, spend a good part of their time abroad. Sometimes they resent our government's impudence in collecting duties on their imported luxuries. The source of their wealth and extravagances is the American consumer's ability to pay dearly for the necessaries of life. And he pays.

The tariff tax is beyond protest by those who have to pay it. The only sure relief for American consumers is to lighten the tax by a "downward" tariff revision.

Why the Tariff?

Selfishness and sordid bargaining are the primal forces behind each tariff. And they make it certain that the efforts to obtain a tariff-making commission or a merely advisory body will fail. The tariff is in politics, nourished by politics, and reared by politics. It will stay in politics because it is the best asset the Republican party has had. It wins victories by the sale of tariff favors, and then, if the outcry is too great, it deludes its followers by specious promises of reductions—coupled with the raising of duties on certain favored articles. The only way the tariff can be taken out of politics is by political action, by a realization that it spells special privilege, graft and political corruption—nothing else, and banishing the whole thing from our public life. As to tariff commissioners, the most that the protesting protectionists can hope for is a purely advisory committee of paid experts to obtain, sift and classify information. But would any ways and means committee thereafter avail itself of the knowledge thus acquired? Perish the thought—if the Republican party is to continue to be "practical" and win presidential eelections.

Same Old Cry of "Wolf!"

When the price of steel goes down, the wages of steel workers invariably respond. This has been recognized for many years by sliding-scale agreements between workers and employers in the steel business. Following the recent reduction in the price of railway and structural steel it was expected that there might be corresponding wage cuts. The first which has occurred is that made by the Lackawanna Steel Corporation, one of the largest independent concerns in the United States, which has posted at its Buffalo shops a notice of a wage reduction of about ten per cent. The cut is general, extending from unskilled laborers in the mills to employes in the offices. The Jones & Laughlin Company and other Pittsburg independents continue to pay the old scale, and so does the United States Steel Corporation. It has been intimated that wages will be maintained at the corporation mills unless congress makes a change in the tariff.

Tariff Revision Comes First.

Had the Christian Herald asked politicians what Mr. Taft's most important task will be, tariff revision would almost certainly have outdistanced everything else. As the poll reads up to date, though, that answer is well in the lead; out of 200 "prominent citizens," 105 count that reform in the group of most urgent issues. One other fact the poll brings out—to-wit: The popularity of the federalist part of the "Roosevelt policies" among "jurists, mayors, bishops, university presidents, authors, artists," and other eminences. Each of the 200 was allowed to name as the most important every undertaking which he could not feel was secondary; 1,466 votes were therefore cast for 37 tasks, and, of these, 704 were given to 15 policies involving centralization of power at Washington. The response to Mr Roosevelt's call for a big navy gives only 58 votes, which are almost offset by 39 others in favor of peace and a reduction of military and naval forces.

Mr. Roosevelt will emerge from the African jungle in April, 1910, just about the time the United States is beginning to convalesce.

THE THIN RED LINE.

Incident That Was Inspiration for Famous Painting.

Robert Gibb's famous painting, "The Thin Red Line," represents an incident in the battle of Balaclava. At this memorable conflict, which was fought on October 25, 1854, a heavy body of Russian cavalry having driven the Turks like chaff before a whirlwind from their redoubts, dashed on in the direction of the town of Balaclava, but found the Ninety-third Highlanders, 500 strong, under the command of Sir Colin Campbell, in their way. Sir Colin rode along the ranks and said to his men: "Remember, there is no retreat from here, men; you must die where you stand." To which voices were heard answering cheerily: "Aye, aye, Sir Colin, we'll do that." In a moment more the Russian squadrons were bearing down upon the Highlanders, who stood still to receive them, not in square, but in the ordinary British battleline of "two-deep." The affair occupied a very few minutes. At long range a well-directed fire from the Ninety-third told with evident effect on the Russians, who, however, swept on, wheeling suddenly to the left with a purpose of taking the Highlanders in flank. But a quickly responsive movement of the Grenadier company of the Ninety-third, under Capt. Ross, spoiled the attempt. The mighty wave of horsemen still came rolling on, when, at about a hundred yards' distance, the rifles descended with a flash below the feather bonnets, and a second volley rang forth, scattering death and confusion among the over-confident foe. The Russians wheeled to the left, and altogether forsook that part of the field.

The Fighting Editor.

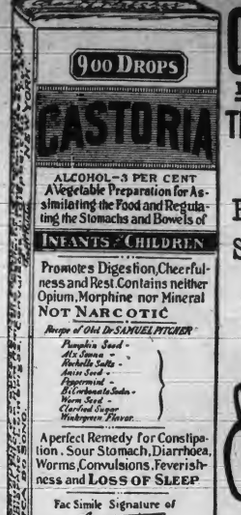
The fighting editor is no joke in Paris. There, if a paper calls a man a liar or a thief, the man takes it seriously, and, visiting the office, he demands a retraction or a fight.

It is the fighting editor who receives him. The fighting editor sits in a Louis XVI. study, smoking a cigarette and reading a new novel with a yellow cover. He is faultlessly dressed in deep black—the duellist's color. The ribbon of the Legion of Honor is in his buttonhole. His brilliant eyes and clear skin proclaim his perfect condition. His alert, supple carriage shows his military training.

The fighting editor never writes a line, but is responsible, personally, for every word in the paper every day. On a plain, outspoken sheet like Le Matin, which keeps him pretty busy, his salary is very large—$40 a week or so. A conservative journal like Le Temps, having little use for a fighting editor pays the man no more than $20. If Arthur Brisbane had a French newspaper, it is estimated that no fighting editor would work for him under $200 a week.

Preparing an Alibi.

If culture remains confined within the splendidly bound volumes of the new library that has just been bought by a New Yorker it will not be the fault of the rich man's secretary. He is doing everything he can to let it loose.



"I am cutting the leaves in all the books," he said. "The chances are nobody belonging to the family will ever look inside these books, but the boss has friends who may go snooping around through the library sometimes. In case they do, he doesn't want them to gain the impression that literature is neglected in this house, so I am making sure that they will at least find the leaves cut."

Sneezing Superstitions.

The Germans say: "Good health!" because they maintain, and not without reason, that the sneeze is a warning of the approach of a cold, and also marks the movement when a charm a wish, or a suggestion may drive it away. The Persians go further in this direction, inasmuch as they exclaim: "God be thanked!" its being held that the sneeze has actually put to flight some evil spirit that was about to gain entrance to a man's body in order to feed upon his sacred fires.—The Sunday Magazine.

THE KALAMAZOO SILO.

The great modern method of storing and preserving green food throughout the year and especially during the winter season when green food is the most valuable and utilized to the greatest profit.

INVALUABLE to the FARM.

Saving more to live stock owners than any agency that can be employed on the farm. Those who have the Silo in use would not part with it for many times its cost.

Supplies Nutritious Green Food Throughout the Wintry Months

Saves Fifty Per Cent of the Feed.

A modern method of preserving the green food with all its nutrients and providing its being fed without waste.

The Silo built by the Kalamazoo Co is the best in use and is composed of seven kinds of wood. It is a large wooden tank that is designed to be filled with the green food in season, and being closed and air tight the food is preserved in its green state, moist and sweet. The Silo is so arranged that the feed can be taken from it without impairing the quality of the balance. The cost of the Silo is small considering its saving, and it has the earning capacity of any improvement on the farm. 40 per cent of the nutrients of the corn plant is in the stalks, leaves and husks, and where siloed, stock consume all of it in preference to any other feed.

Estimates and full description furnished on application. Write us and we will call and see you, explaining the process—it will cost you nothing.

WHICH?
Which way do you skim your milk? It is hard sometimes to realise just how great the loss of cream is with crocks and pans. Some people may not believe that a

U. S. CREAM SEPARATOR
skims enough closer than the old way to increase their butter yield one-fourth or more. But it does, and there's a plain reason for it. When you set milk the cream and skim milk are separated from one another by the force of gravity, but when milk with a U. S. Separator centrifugal force, which is thousands of times stronger than gravity, does the separating. It squeezes out the last drop of cream. Cream is money—you can't afford to waste it. If you keep three or more cows, it will pay you to buy a U. S. Separator. Come in and look one over, anyway. They are sold by Local News.

A Card.

To the Voters of Boone County:

If I am elected Circuit Judge of this district I will make the circuit clerk of this county my Master Commissioner. I declared I would do this the very day I announced for the office, and have stated this generally to the people wherever and whenever I have seen them. I do not make this statement for any electioneering scheme, but because the position rightfully belongs to the clerk, who, I understand, can not make a living out of his office. The customs of a people should be respected without regard to political favors, and this is especially true if the breaking of them work an injustick to any man. M. H. BOURNE

Five issues of the RECORDER in this month.

The gardens about town are breaking nicely.

An occasional period of a few days nice weather may be expected now.

Lennie and Stanley Eddins are guests of their sister, Mrs. Hubert White.

County Clerk B. W. Adams has been laid up for a week with a severe cold.

Deputy Sheriff W. D. Cropper made a business trip to Petersburg, last Friday.

The numerous incubators and hens are making the women thru the county busy with young chickens.

Last week's Williamstown Courier contains a picture of Robert Sheriff, 97, the county's oldest citizen.

Only a few days in which to file suits in time for the approaching term of the Boone circuit court remains.

James Strouse has moved to Thomas Rouse's house, which until recently, was occupied by Elbert Jones.

Mrs. Roy Clutterbuck's piano was shipped to her, last Wednesday, at her home in Los Angelese, California.

The candidates for district offices have been giving the dear people of Boone county some attention the past few days.

Everybody hopes that next Monday will be a good day so that the candidates and horses will have a good audience.

C. W. Robinson was in Burlington, last Thursday, putting the finishing touches on his trade with Charles Craven.

James Gaines, of the breezy uplands of lower Woolper, was the guest of his brother, Attorney Sidney Gaines, last Thursday.

Daniel Baker and Wm. McCrander, of Berkshire, were transacting business in Burlington, last Friday, and made this office a pleasant call.

The committee for soliciting special premiums for the next fair at Florence has been provided with the necessary equipment for its work.

W. J. Rice was out of the house and about his yard several times last week, and it is hoped the improvement in his health will continue.

Ohio county, Indiana, voted dry, last Wednesday, by a majority of 32 votes. It looks very much like the "drys" have the call in the Hoosier State.

Last Thursday was the most perfect March day of the year. The wind blew, the snow flew, and old Sol peeped through a rift in the clouds several times.

Circuit Clerk James A. Duncan returned home, last Thursday, after having spent several days with his daughter, Mrs. V. W. Gaines, of Bullittsburg.

Having had their light plant given a thorough overhauling, Kelly & Roberts' place of business presents a very cheerful appearance now of an evening.

Jesse Kirkpatrick has completed a nice barn for H. G. Gaines, who will give much attention to the breeding and training of high-classed horses in the future.

The sweet, lovely notes of the turtle dove have been heard in the land for several days, while the entire bird tribe appears particularly cheerful for this time of the year.

Sportsmen's Special—Field and Stream, $1.50, National Sportsman $1—$2.50, my price, $2; Recreation, $3, Forest and Stream, $3—$6, my price, $3 70. C. L. GAINES.

Dressmakers' Special—The Designer 6 months; New Idea six months, Pictorial Review 6 months, Paris Modes 6 months, regular price $2 10, my price $1. C. L. GAINES

There will not be a siege of bad roads this spring, but this fact should not cause the farmers throughout the county to lessen their efforts to improve the roads.

Each of several dashing widowers in the second magisterial district think the item in last week's RECORDER referred to him. It will not be long until developments will designate the gentlemen referred to.

F. C. Greene, candidate for Commonwealth's Attorney in this district, blew into town one day last week, and organized a corps of bill posters and put them to work.

It is said that one of the results of the voting of local option in Ohio county, Indiana, last week, will be an increase in the passenger traffic from Rising Sun to Aurora.

R. B. Huey and T. J. Walton, of Commissary, received the money for their pooled tobacco last week. They handled their own tobacco, putting it in the hogsheads at home.

A foreign substance of some kind got into one of Jesse Kirkpatrick's eyes while at work at G. T. Gaines', one day last week, and it caused him considerable pain for several hours.

While everybody seems to be preparing to pitch all the tobacco they can cultivate, very few are making arrangements to cultivate a crop of tomatoes for use by the canneries.

Stanley Crouch, of Petersburg, was a guest at the Boone House, one night last week. He was out on a campaign of wire fence selling, and doing some electioneering as a side line.

James T. Smith, assessor for the Farmers' Mutual Fire Insurance Company, was in East Bend, one day last week, viewing the ruins of Peter Hager's barn that was destroyed by a fire a few days before.

The farmer who is industrious and a good manager is never very far behind with his work when seeding time arrives. He always manages "to get there" by the time nature is ready for the planting of a crop.

The Ohio river reached a normal condition last week, and those who cultivate the low lands which it causes to be overflowed when it is on a boom are very much in hopes that it will not go beyond its banks this spring.

From reports from counties in central Kentucky it is evident that lambs are doing extra well and that the number is larger than for several years. Clark county's crop will be more numerous than last year, says the Winchester Democrat.

They are preparing for the drought in Rising Sun, which is not so hard to get use to after all, and the boys will find that their breakfast will be relished just as well without having been preceded by the morning's nip.

D. E. Castleman returned the latter part of last week from a ten days' canvass in Owen and other counties in this judicial district, and says his prospects for nomination for Commonwealth's attorney look very good to him.

The little son, of James Strouse, who lives near town, got choked on a piece of onion peeling, one evening last week, and for a while it looked like the little fellow would choke to death, but he finally succeeded in expelling it.

The local attorneys are preparing their cases for the approaching term of the circuit court. Litigation has reached such a low ebb in Boone county that one attorney could attend to one side of each suit filed, and then some.

Charles Miller Deputy Grand Chancellor of the K. of P. of Kentucky, will visit Burlington Lodge No. 109, Saturday night, April 3d, 1909. All members of the lodge are requested to be present as Mr. Miller will deliver a lecture on Pythianism, and the state of the order.

Farm work, such as breaking land is further advanced at this time of the year than usual. While there has been much disagreeable weather so far this year it has not been so severe as to delay farm work entirely, and all the time having been put in the farmers find themselves abreast of the time with their work.

The indications are that each of the ladies in the Teachers' Popularity contest has a large number of votes pledged to them, many of whom have renewed their subscriptions, deferring casting their ballots until later in the contest, consequently a rush late in the day is anticipated at this office when the candidates will have to show their real strength. There is yet an abundance of material on which the contestants can work, remembering that one new subscriber counts as much as two renewals, and remember furthermore that no switching of subscriptions in a family will be permitted, that is where a family is now receiving the RECORDER it cannot be changed to another member of the family for the purpose of claiming 300 votes under the head of a new subscriber. As the vote stands now first place is not out of the reach of either of the contestants, and the lead of several hundred votes any week may be overcome the next week, consequently it behooves the contestants and their friends to be on the alert all the time, remembering that the REAL PRIZE is the honor of being voted the most popular lady school teacher in the county.

While the growing of tobacco in this section will be general this year the average grower should put out only such a crop as he is sure of being able to cultivate without depending on transient labor, for the latter class of work is expected to be high and difficult to obtain.

It makes no difference which of the three candidates for the Democratic nomination for Commonwealth's Attorney in this district wins out, the very great probability is the race will result in a new Richmond from the county contesting for Congressional honors in this district in 1910.

Harmon Jones, who drives the Burlington and Erlanger bus, is getting his portion of exercise daily, since his father moved two miles out into the country. The bus reaches Burlington at 6:20 p. m., and Harmon goes on to his father's for his supper, returning to Burlington in the morning in time to leave for Erlanger with the bus at 6 a. m.

The Greenwood Stock Co. will repeat their presentation of "Because I Love You" at Hebron Hall, Saturday night, April 3d. This will give an opportunity to those who missed the other performance to avail themselves of this chance. The play was excellently rendered, each character performing his part in a creditable manner and is more than worth the price of admission, 25 cents.

Mr. I. W. Craig, many years ago a citizen of Plattsburg neighborhood, this county, dropped dead on the street in Aurora, last Wednesday about noon. He was born in 1842, in Carroll county, this State, and had been a citizen of Aurora for several years previous to his death. He leaves two sons and one daughter, Mrs. John Baldon, of Colorado. He was, apparently, in good health up to the time of his death.

The name of M. C. Norman on the RECORDER'S Union list was changed to A. H. Norman, last week. Esq. M. C. Norman was a constant reader and subscriber to the RECORDER from the appearance of the first number until his death, and his son A. H. steps in and takes his place. Quite a number of those who were faithful to the RECORDER from its infancy have passed away in the last few years and their children have stepped in and taken their place as suoscribers.

Capt. Chas. Kottmyer, of Constance, was transacting business in Burlington, last Friday. Capt. Kottmyer was a policeman in Cincinnati previous to his taking charge of the ferry in 1864. He says it did not take him long to get enough of the life of a policeman. He installed the steam ferry which he has built up until it is one of the best ferry properties along the Ohio river. He is probably the oldest ferryman on the river, and in his long career he never has had an accident at his ferry that resulted in the loss of a human life.

Mrs. W. J. Weindell secured for the RECORDER the services of Miss Clara Sweazy as correspondent to succeed her when she and the doctor left Petersburg for their new home, Speedwell, Virginia, which is only 15 miles from the North Carolina line. Miss Sweazy has already proven that she will be most efficient as a reporter, and able to keep the Petersburg column up to the high standard it had reached under Mrs. Weindell's much appreciated efforts. The RECORDER hopes the doctor and his wife will meet with abundant success in their new home.

EASY TO MIX THIS.

Simple Recipe for Kidney or Bladder Trouble or Rheumatism.

What will appear very interesting to many people here is the article taken from a New York daily paper, giving a simple prescription, which is said to be a positive remedy for backache or kidney or bladder derangement, if taken before the stage of Bright's disease:

Fluid Extract Dandelion, one-half ounce; Compound Kargon, one ounce; Compound Syrup Sarsaparilla, three ounces. Shake well in a bottle and take in teaspoonful doses after each meal and again at bedtime.

A well known druggist here at home, when asked regarding this prescription, stated that the ingredients are all harmless, and can be obtained at a small cost from any good prescription pharmacy, or the mixture would be put up if asked to do so. He further stated that while this prescription is often prescribed in rheumatic afflictions with splendid results, he could see no reason why it would not be a splendid remedy for kidney and urinary troubles and backache as it has a peculiar action upon the kidney structure, cleansing these most important organs and helping them to sift and filter from the blood the foul acids and waste matter which cause sickness and suffering. Those of our readers who suffer can make no mistake in giving it a trial.

STOMACH DISTRESS.

And all Misery from Indigestion Vanishes Five Minutes Later.

Every family here ought to keep some Diapepsin in the house, as any one of you may have an attack of Indigestion or Stomach trouble at any time, day or night.

This harmless preparation will digest anything you eat and overcome a sour stomach five minutes afterwards.

If your meals don't tempt you, or what little you do eat seems to fill you, or lays like a lump of lead in your stomach, or if you have heartburn, that is a sign of Indigestion.

Ask your Pharmacist for a 50-cent case of Pape's Diapepsin and take one triangule after supper tonight. There will be no sour risings, no belching of undigested food mixed with acid, no stomach gas or heartburn, fullness or heavy feeling in the stomach, Nausea, Debilitating Headaches, Dizziness or Intestinal griping. This will all go, and besides, there will be no sour food left over in the stomach to poison your breath with nauseous odors.

Pape's Diapepsin is a certain cure for all stomach misery, because it will take hold of your food and digest it just the same as if your stomach wasn't there.

Actual, prompt relief for all your stomach misery is at your Pharmacist, waiting for you.

These large 50 cent cases contain more than sufficient to cure a case of Dyspepsia or Indigestion.

F. C. Greene Complimented.

At the conclusion of the late term of the Owen Circuit Court, the grand jury after a two weeks session returned ONE HUNDRED and forty seven (147) indictments, 110 of which charged violations of the liquor laws. The town is now absolutely corked up. The report is signed by the foreman, George W. Davis, and concluded in a very complimentary reference to our Commonwealth Attorney Frank C. Greene, as follows:

"We unanimously express our appreciation of the able counsel and assistance given us in our work by Commonwealth's Attorney, F. C. Greene, and assure him that much of the credit is due him for the work we have done." (adv.)

Commonwealth Attorney Frank C. Greene discharged his duties in the court this week with his usual efficiency and diligence of prosecution of all transgressers of the law. Mr. Greene has many friends here in Warsaw, who appreciate him for his unswerving devotion to duty, his intellectual attainments and social traits of character. What enemies he has made has been in the discharge of his duty, and he deserves commendation for having his oath of office appeal to him more strongly than the enmity of favor of any individual.—Warsaw Independent, March 20th. (adv.)

The case of Terrill against Tolin, an appeal from a judgment of the Boone Circuit Court, was reversed by the Court of Appeals, last Thursday. This was the suit in which Lewis B. Terrill, who lives at Lawrenceburg Ferry, this county, recovered a judgment for $5,500 damages against S. W. Tolin, who owns and operates the Lawrenceburg ferry. The plaintiff Terrill was crossing the river one day with his team of mules, when one of the horses used on the power of the boat reached over from its treadway and bit one of Terrill's mules, when it kicked Terrill in the face, hurting him so badly that for several days his life was despaired of. The trial of the case created considerable interest in the neighborhood of the ferry.

Charles Sebree, of Cleves, was the guest of A. C. Porter, last Friday. Mr. Sebree is well pleased with his new home, but has to come back to Woolper creek, occasionally, to listen to the music of the rippling water that has charmed his ear from early childhood. The birds sing sweeter and the sun shines brighter for him in Kentucky than in Ohio.

Scrutinize the Maxims.

A busy clergyman declared recently that the way he got through his work was by violating most of the precepts he had been taught in boyhood, foremost among them, "If you want anything done, do it yourself." The housekeeper may take a leaf from his book. For example, the task which she turns over to her daughter lightens her own hands and trains those of the little maiden. The most fatal precept for "mother" to observe is, "Whatever is worth doing at all, is worth doing well" —that is, if "well" is interpreted to mean "as well as you can do it." Here is a place for her to use that judgment which comes so high in the markets of the world and is too often held so cheap in the home. "As well as possible" is none too well when the task is making an apple pie or boiling a potato; but the woman who dusts her house from attic to cellar every day as well as she can do it lacks a sense of proportion. So does she who darns a pair of 25-cent stockings a half-hour a week for three months. "A penny saved is a penny earned" is another dangerous maxim, declares the Youth's Companion, unless it is administered with discretion. Cheap milk may involve large doctor's bills. Cheap eggs may mean an uneatable pudding. A low wage in the kitchen may carry with it waste far beyond its saving. Women are learning that being a woman demands some knowledge of almost every subject of modern economic inquiry, and that it is no longer possible to trust all the useful precepts of the past to solve the problems of the present.

The extraordinary and practical success that has attended the work of well-endowed government-supported institutions for the scientific study of disease and the systematic test of new methods for the treatment of such maladies as have hitherto resisted the efforts of physicians and surgeons is one of the most striking and promising features of present-day medicine. In the United States the most important of the few institutions of this kind is the Rockefeller Institute for Medical Research, founded in 1901 by Mr. John D. Rockefeller. Under this endowment there is maintained in New York city a well-equipped medical laboratory where a staff of trained investigators, free from the cares of routine practice, hospital work, or teaching, are concentrating their entire attention upon researches which deal with the prevention and cure of disease. As in other scientific institutions, where effective organization and adequacy of material equipment are most essential, remarks Herbert T. Wade, in the American Review of Reviews, so that at the Rockefeller institute everything has been arranged in order that experimental medicine may be prosecuted under conditions most productive of good results.

Some of the devices by which ignorance tries to deceive intelligence are amusing. The largest coal field in the United States is that which extends from Casper and Douglas, Wyo., northward to the Canadian line. Under the law which provides that coal lands of certain character and situation shall be withdrawn from homestead entry, investigation of this field has lately been made by government geologists. The coal here appears in what is known as "blanket veins," which lie nearly parallel to the surface, so that an outcrop appearing on one side of a hill is likely to be found on the other side at the same elevation. But many of the ranchers and would-be settlers, maintaining that "coal lands," under the law, are only those in which the coal appears on the surface, have gone so far as to level the tops of hills to cover outcropping coal veins, under the delusion that they could deceive the geologists.

Herculaneum lies under the modern villages of Portici and Resina. In attempting to excavate the buried city, the Italian government is encountering the problem of the property rights of the people who live on the modern level. The legal theory is that a landowner owns an inverted pyramid whose apex is the center of the earth —everything under him is his. But who inherits the property rights of the subsoil town which [illegible] 2,000 years ago? A law is pending to take by right of eminent domain the ground from under the Resina landowners, or at least the treasures it may conceal.

A scientist has made a calculation about the time it will take to fill the world with all the people it will hold. The present population of the globe is supposed to be about 1,467,000,000, and he estimates that the maximum of the inhabitants that can be sustained on the entire land surface of the earth is 5,994,000,000, and this figure will be reached A. D. 2072, or in about 180 years.

FEAR FOR KIDNAPERS

BOYLES TAKEN TO PITTSBURG FOR SAFE KEEPING.

INDICTED AT CLEVELAND

Will Be Tried for Blackmail if They Fail of Conviction in Pennsylvania —Identified by Whitla Boy.

Pittsburg, Pa. — Fearing for the safety of their prisoners if they were taken to Sharon or the county seat at Mercer, officers brought James H. Boyle and his wife, accused of kidnaping Willie Whitla, to the Allegheny county jail here.

They were brought here in a special Pullman car from Cleveland by way of Youngstown and New Castle, over the Pittsburg & Lake Erie railroad. The prisoners were guarded in their car by 16 detectives and officers.

It was the unanimous opinion of the officers engaged on the case that it would be safer not to take any chances by exposing their prisoners to the wrath of the Sharon populace.

Indicted at Cleveland.

The Cleveland police have a club over the heads of the Boyles in a joint indictment charging them with blackmail. This charge is based on the payment of $10,000 ransom by J. P. Whitla for the recovery of his son in that city last Monday. This indictment will be used by the Cleveland officials in the event that the case here fails of conviction. The Boyles did not fight extradition to this state.

Boy Identifies Kidnapers.

Cleveland, O.—All doubt that the man and woman arrested Tuesday night are the kidnapers of Willie Whitla, the Sharon (Pa.) boy whose father paid $10,000 ransom for his recovery, was dispelled Wednesday, when the lad, without hesitation, identified the prisoners when he faced them in the police station.

Willie said the man who gave the name of James H. Boyle was the one who took him from school and carried him through the tortuous route to Cleveland, then to Ashtabula, back to this city, and placed him in the house in the east end where he was held until the money was paid. Willie also declared that the woman was the one who cared for him at the house where he was detained and who acted the part of a nurse.

Boyle said the woman was his wife. The police have no other identification of the couple than the names given. Boyle is said to reside in Sharon and is a plumber by trade. He is said to have a widowed mother, four brothers and a sister.

The woman, who is accredited with being the wife of Boyle, declared soon after her arrest that her identification would cause a sensation in Sharon.

When the identification was completed Mr. Whitla would say nothing regarding the woman. He said he knew Boyle slightly.

When Boyle was taken before the boy Chief Kohler asked Willie if he had ever seen the man before.

"Sure," said Willie, brightly; "why that is the man I left Sharon with. He took me to Cleveland, then to Ashtabula and back to Cleveland."

When Willie concluded Boyle was taken back to his cell and the woman was brought in.

Immediately Willie walked up to her and extending his hands, said:

"How do you do?"

"Hello, Willie," the woman replied, as she placed her hand upon his head and caressed him for an instant.

The boy then stepped back to his father and was asked several questions by the chief of police.

"Yes, I know her," he said, "she was the nurse who took care of me in Cleveland. She told me I was sick and in a hospital. I saw her a whole lot as she was with me most all of the time."

Whitla Abductor Chicago Woman.

Mercer, Pa.—Heavily manacled to Sheriff Chess and guarded by several detectives, James Boyle, one of the kidnapers of little Willie Whitla, was brought here Friday from Pittsburg and lodged in the Mercer county jail. His wife, who has been identified as Anna McDermott, daughter of William McDermott, a former Chicago fireman, it is said, will be brought here from Pittsburg Saturday and the couple will be formally arraigned on a charge of kidnaping in a few days.

Boyle feared violence in his arrival in Mercer and on the journey from Pittsburg asked Sheriff Chess if he thought the crowd would harm him.

OFFER BINGHAM BIG BRIBE

GOTHAM POLICE COMMISSIONER COULD HAVE $600,000 YEARLY.

Declares His Job Would Be a Gold Mine to a Dishonest Man.

New York. — A dishonest man holding the position of police commissioner in New York city easily might become a millionaire in a few months, so great are the opportunities for illicit gains, according to a statement by Commissioner Bingham.

During Mr. Bingham's first year in the office, he said, a single bribe of $600,000 a year was offered him if he would protect certain criminal interests. "Compliance with the conditions of the offer," he added, "would have been entirely of a negative matter—all they wanted was to be let alone."

Commissioner Bingham was worked up over the refusal of the city aldermen to vote him an appropriation of $100,000 for a secret service to investigate "Black Hand" crimes and other matters.

"This job of police commissioner," he said, "for example, would be a regular gold mine to a dishonest official. If it were put up at auction to the highest bidder, a man could well afford to pay $1,000,000 for a year's opportunity to accept what the criminal classes would be only too glad to offer him."

Then he referred to the $600,000 bribe offer which he had received when he first took up the office. "The offer was of course carefully guarded," he said. "It came from a suave gentleman, who knew how to handle words to perfection and was able to make his hearer understand what was meant without laying himself open to any unpleasant after effects.

"I listened until I understood what the fellow was about. Then I gave him such a talking to that he will never forget his visit here as long as he lives. I have not heard from him since."

Commissioner Bingham declined to give the name of the man who had made the offer, nor would he say what interests had sought protection.

GET CLOSE TO SOUTH POLE.

British Navy Officer and His Party Within 111 Miles.

London.—Lieut. E. H. Shackleton of the British navy, commander of the Antarctic expedition, which returned on the barkentine Nimrod to Invercargill, New Zealand, although he did not achieve his object, succeeded in getting within 111 miles of the pole.

The Nimrod expedition left England in July, 1907, and after reaching the ice fields and making the most elaborate preparations, the main expedition started on a sledge journey which occupied 126 days and traversed 1,708 miles southwards. The explorers reached latitude 88.23 and longitude 162 east, which was estimated as 111 miles from the pole.

He has sent word to the officials of the three counties to meet him Saturday and show cause why he should not send soldiers to see that the tax collector is not molested in the performance of his duty.

MRS. LORILLARD A SUICIDE.

Kills Herself with Gas Following Washington Society Dinner.

Washington.—Weary of the gay whirl of society and face to face as she believed with years of physical suffering, Mrs. Pierre Lorillard, Jr., aged 49, wife of the tobacco magnate, committed suicide by asphyxiation at her home near the fashionable Dupont circle in this city Thursday.

The death was made more dramatic by occurring only a few hours after Mr. and Mrs. Lorillard had been the guests of Mrs. Townsend, on Massachusetts avenue, at a dinner given in honor of Lady Paget. She had joined freely in the social festivities of the evening at the Townsend home, where had gathered the Brazilian ambassador and Mme. Nabuco, the Danish minister and Countess Moltke, the Secretary of the Navy and Mrs. Meyer, Senator and Mrs. Lodge, Senator and Mrs. Aldrich, Senator Root, Mr. and Mrs. Robert Bacon, Mr. and Mrs. W. C. Endicot of Boston, Lady Clifford of England, Col and Mrs. Colin Campbell, Col. and Mrs. McCawley, Mr. and Mrs. Clarence Moore, Hon. Maude Pauncefote, Commodore Rodgers, Rear Admiral Cowles and Capt. Archibald Butt, military aide of the president.

SOLONS NEAR FIGHT OVER TARIFF

Fordney of Michigan Clashes with Byrd of Mississippi.

Washington.—The monotony of the tariff debate in the house of representatives was relieved for a time Friday by a clash between Messrs. Fordney of Michigan and Byrd of Mississippi, which came near ending in blows.

Mr. Fordney had been making an exhaustive discussion of the lumber schedule when he was interrupted by the Mississippian who insisted that the lumber manufacturers of which Mr. Fordney was one, were in a trust. Mr. Fordney peremptorily denied the statement and said that Mr. Byrd didn't know a d—n thing about it."

The Mississippi member made a move toward Mr. Fordney and was in the act of removing his coat when some of his Democratic colleagues took hold of him. Later it developed that the incident grew out of a misunderstanding and both men made mutual explanations and apologies.

KILL THREE AND WOUND FIVE.

Oklahoma Deputy Sheriffs in Battle with Negroes and Indians.

Guthrie, Okla. — On the scene of the famous Creek Indian uprising of last year at Hickory settlement, two negroes were killed, five wounded and 40 captured in a battle between 20 deputy sheriffs and 100 negroes and seven Indians. The fighting began late Wednesday afternoon and continued with interruptions until ten o'clock Thursday.

Five deputies went from Henrietta, 18 miles north to the negro settlement to arrest cattle thieves thought to be [illegible] in the house of one of the negroes. They were met at the outer edge of the camp by a party of armed negroes and fired upon. A few hours after the first clash, a larger posse, heavily armed, reached the settlement. About 300 shots were fired in the last encounter, when the two negroes were killed and Deputy Sheriff Fowler was wounded.

No Strike, Says Lewis.

Indianapolis, Ind.—"I see no prospect of a strike in the anthracite coal fields," said Thomas L. Lewis, president of the United Mine Workers of America, at the close of Friday's session of the national executive board. "The miners will continue at work indefinitely. That is to say unless the operators demand that a new agreement be signed to take the place of the one that expires April 1." He said the anthracite situation will receive little more than passing consideration at the meeting here.

BATTLE BETWEEN MILITIA AND INDIANS EXPECTED

Crazy Snake's Band, Led By Old Chief, Takes To Hills In Preparation For Last Fight.

Oklahoma City, Okla., March 29.—The first real Indian uprising of years has held this portion of the territory on edge for the last three days. It has been plotted and prepared for two months. It broke out last Thursday, when some deputies went to Henryetta to arrest negro cattle thieves. They were fired on by negro and half-breed friends of the negroes. In the fight three were killed and five wounded. Meanwhile Crazy Snake's followers decided upon an aggressive campaign. The chief's plans had to be prematurely sprung on account of the unexpected raid of the deputies on Henryetta.

Deputies fanned the flame by hunting strenuously for the leaders and Crazy Snake, forced to the wall, determined to strike a hard blow. In an effort to escape Saturday night part of his band was run to cover by deputies in a search for the leaders in Thursday's fight. Marshal Edward Bauer of Cheectah and Deputy Odom of Eufaula gave their lives as a price. They were shot down.

Chief Crazy Snake and 100 followers retreated before five companies of Oklahoma militia late Sunday night, thus deferring an expected battle until Monday.

Hastily setting fire to his tepees and tents the Indian leader, with his mixed company of redskins and negroes, fled from their blazing camp as the troops advanced. They took up a strong position between the North Canadian river and Deep Fork creek, about seven miles east of Henryetta.

Col. Hoffman, in command of the state troops, considered it unwise to push the pursuit and engage the Indians in the darkness. Accordingly he bivouced his troops for the night. Early in the morning, re-enforced by a company of cowboys from around Lawton, Okla., all crack shots, he will lead his forces against the Indians. Crazy Snake and his braves will be offered a chance to surrender. If they refuse the battle will be on.

The militia officers believe Crazy Snake wants to reach the Tiger mountains with his followers before engaging in a general fight.

That the old chief is trying to stir the Creeks to an uprising and strike for what he conceives to be liberty was evident from the smoke of three signal fires on adjacent hills just before sundown. Old time frontiersmen, who insist they know what such things mean, declare this is a sign which always ushers in Indian trouble.

Maj. Charles F. Barrett, in charge of the commissary, received hurried orders Sunday night by courier to send supplies and additional ammunition to the soldiers at the camp. From this it is inferred that the officers expect a long chase before a fight. Dr. I. M. Wallace, of Dustin, Okla., who went to the Hickory hills with the troops Sunday, declared more than 20 negroes were killed Thursday and Saturday and were given rude burial without coffins in the vicinity where the soldiers camped Sunday night.

This Sunday was full of thrills. All Oklahoma was aroused. As the reports of the slaying of Marshal Baum and Deputy Sheriff Odom were spread broadcast the people were inflamed with a determination to make an end to the murderous hand.

The chief's son fell into the hands of the palefaces. From him the deputies choked a confession of his father's misdoings and a full statement of the murderous doings of the previous night.

Gov. Haskell has ordered out troops by wholesale. Every company in Oklahoma either was rushed to the front or ordered to prepare to go.

WHIRLWIND CAUGHT SCHOONER,

Sending Her To the Bottom—Twenty Lives Lost.

New Orleans, La., March 29.—Advices from Bluefields tell of the sinking of the coasting schooner Kearsarge, between Greytown and Monkey Point, and the loss of 20 lives. Following is a list of the passengers: Mrs. Sofia Carter, Mrs. Clida Hodgson, Mrs. A. Casanova and daughter, Mrs. Ersie Garo and four children, Felimina Blandford, Imogene Blandford, Alverda Howard and daughter, Mrs. Newball and three children, Mrs. Teresa Casanova and two Colombians.

The only survivors are the cook, two sailors and five passengers, who succeeded in getting ashore in a dory, leaving the other passengers, mostly women and children, to their fate. When they were somewhere off Monkey Point, as near as they can guess, a whirlwind caught the schooner. The vessel was whirled around violently two or three times and then taken under the water, bow foremost, and must have gone right to the bottom, as she had a heavy cargo of cocoanuts.

Wealthy Chinaman Arrested.

Nehemiah Closes Jerusalem's Gates Against the Traders.

BY THE "HIGHWAY AND BYWAY" PREACHER

(Copyright, 1905, by the Author, W. G. Moore.)

Scripture Authority.—Nehemiah 13: 15-21.

Historical Difficulty.—The chief, indeed the only real historical difficulty in the narrative, is to determine the time of the dedication of the wall, whether in the 32nd year of Artaxerxes, or before. The expression in Neh. 12:1, "On that day," seems to fix the reading of the law to the same day as the dedication (see 12:43). But, if so, the dedication must have been after Nehemiah's return from Babylon (mentioned 13:7). Then, if the wall took only 52 days to complete (Nehemiah 6:15), and was begun immediately Nehemiah entered upon the government, how came the dedication to be deferred till 12 years afterward? The answer to this probably is, that, in the first place, the 52 days are to be reckoned from the resumption of the work after 4:15, and a time exceeding two years may have elapsed from the commencement of the building. But even then it would not be ready for dedication. There were the gates to be hung, perhaps much rubbish to be cleared, and the ruined houses in the immediate vicinity of the walls to be repaired. Still, even these causes would not be adequate to account for the delay of 12 years. One cause immediately presents itself, viz., that Nehemiah's leave of absence from the Persian court, mentioned in 2:6, may have drawn to a close shortly after completion of the walls, and before the other above-mentioned works were completed. The last words of chapter 6 point to some new effort of Tobiah to interrupt his work, and the expression used seems to indicate that it was the threat of being considered as a rebel by the king.

SERMONETTE.

Apart from the incidents of Sabbath breaking here recorded, which has to do with Jewish history alone, we have a broader question of the observance of the ons day in seven as a day of rest and worship, with which to deal.

The Jewish dispensation has anded, and we are no longer under the Mosaic law, but the eternal principles which found expression in that law are as important and binding to-day as ever.

The same observance of the Sabbath day is not incumbent upon mankind to-day, but the same need of rest from secular toil and of upbuilding of the soul in Godly thought and purpose is as desirable and necessary to full rounded human life now as it was under the old Jewish law.

Jesus freed the world from the burden of mere formalism of Sabbath day observance, and revealed a new conception of the day's purposes and possibilities as God had intended them.

He broke almost every preconceived notion which had grown up around the day, and herein was the chief source of complaint of the Jewish rulers against him, and gave them ground to charge that he was destroying the Mosaic law.

But Jesus said that he had not come to destroy the law, but to fulfill it. Not to put greater burdens upon mankind, but to free it from the burdens which in the name of the law had been laid upon it.

Two very important declarations were made by Jesus in reference to the Lord's day, the day of rest, and that they are authoritative is certain for he stated positively that he was "Lord of the Sabbath."

From these two statements all necessary deductions can be made for the proper observance of the day.

First: "The Sabbath was made for man, and not man for the Sabbath."

The second is in the form of a question which Jesus put to his enemies and to which there can be but one answer: "Is it lawful on the Sabbath days to do good or evil? To save life, or to destroy it?"

THE STORY.

"WE MUST hurry, Poncho, or else all the best stalls in the market place will be taken," exclaimed a dark-visaged individual to the young man walking at his side, while at the same time he urged on the laden donkey in front of them.

They were on their way to Jerusalem where was to be found a good market for their wares which they had brought with them from Tyre.

"Oh, we'll be there in plenty of time," grumbled the boy, ill-naturedly.

"Yes, but we must get our tent pitched and our goods in place to begin business on the morrow!" exclaimed the older man, impatiently.

It was a motley throng which filled the gate and market place of Jerusalem. Traders of every description were there and the goods they had on sale ranged from food products down through the list of things to wear, and things to use in the household. Bedlam seemed let loose as the throngs of traders busied themselves in preparing for the business of the morrow, and each new arrival only added to the confusion.

It was upon such a scene as this that Nehemiah came that first Sabbath eve after his return to Jerusalem. In horror and amazement he stood and watched the activities, and listened to the medley of voices, and then tarning upon his heel, he swiftly left the scene. Was this the Jerusalem which God had permitted the children to return and establish? Was this the beginning of the Sabbath day?

"Oh, God!" Nehemiah exclaimed, as he hastened back through the streets to the governor's house, "that the people could so far forget God's law! Something must be done," and he closed his lips tightly with the grim, inward resolve.

Little sleep came to the troubled governor that night, and he was early astir, and went out through the fields surrounding Jerusalem, thinking that at least there he would find the peace and quiet which should prevail upon the Sabbath day.

But there again he found that the people had forgotten God, and no longer remembered the Sabbath day to keep it holy. Here was a busy scene in a vineyard, where pickers were plucking and bringing in the grapes while the proprietor and a helper were laboring in the winepress, treading out the grapes. Over on the other side of the little valley through which he passed, there was another man busy in the field, tying and stacking the grain, preparatory to loading it and drawing it to the threshing floor. And still again, further on, he found a group of men busy upon the threshing floor, the sound of the flails ringing out upon the morning air.

"And this is the Sabbath day," he inwardly groaned.

At that moment he met a man passing along the pathway and, stopping him, engaged him in conversation, saying:

"Do not the Jaws observe the Sabbath day?"

The man looked at Nehemiah for a moment without speaking, and then a deep crimson spread over his face as he stammered:

"The rulers gave not the portion to the Levites, and so the temple service has been broken up, and we have been forced to return to our fields for a livelihood."

"Thou art of the Levites?" questioned Nehemiah.

"I am," replied the man, uneasily, "but there is no longer place for us in Jerusalem."

"And are the Sabbaths given over to work in the fields and buying and selling in the market place?" demanded Nehemiah, severely.

"Such is only too sadly the truth," admitted the Levite.

"And how came such condition to exist?" persisted Nehemiah.

"Well, first the worship in God's house was neglected, the rulers of the people not giving the portion to the Levites which was due them. Then the traders from round-about invaded the city and the people, having naught else to do, fell into the habit of frequenting the market place, and, step by step, conditions have come to the pass that you see them. But," and the Levite hesitated, "are you a stranger to these things?"

"Yea, I am Nehemiah, the governor, just returned from Babylon."

The Levite threw himself upon the ground before him, and cried out in dismay:

"New is tronble come npon us, indeed, and the city will feel thy displeasure."

"Rather, may we fear the wrath of our God. Summon thy brethren of the priesthood to me at the temple at once," exclaimed Nehemiah, and turning about he hastened into the city.

If the market place had been a scene of confusion the night before, it was now a place where bedlam was let loose, and what with the cries of the traders as they called their wares, and the voices of the people as they haggled over the prices, there was a din such as Nehemiah had never before witnessed. On to the temple he passed, and when the rulers and priests had gathered unto him he demanded to know why these things were.

Excuses there were in plenty, but reasons none, and Nehemiah, turning to the scroll of the Mosaic law, read the law of God concerning the Sabbath day, and pointed out that the wrath of God would certainly fall upon them and consume them if this iniquity was not purged from the city.

"But how can we?" questioned the rulers and the Levites, in dismay. "The traders are so firmly entrenched in their place in the city, and to offend them will be to ruin the business of the city."

"Would you temporize with evil?" sharply demanded Nehemiah. "Come, I will show you."

And striding forth again into the market place, followed meekly and wonderingly by the Levites and the rulers, he commanded them, saying:

"Pass among the people, and say: 'What evil is this that ye do to profane the Sabbath day? Did not your fathers thus, and did not our God bring all this evil upon us, and upon this city?'"

Not daring to disobey, the voices of the rulers and Levites sounded through the market place, and soon a stillness fell upon the place, wonder filling the hearts of the traders, and fear the hearts of the Jews.

And then, with a loud voice, Nehemiah ordered all the traders to depart from the city, and not daring to refuse, for fear was upon their hearts, they silently gathered together their merchandise and went outside the city, and the gates were shut.

So it was done the next Sabbath day, and Nehemiah, observing that the traders were preparing to carry on their business outside the walls, he spoke to them from the wall, and warned them that did they gather there another week he would lay violent hands upon them and confiscate their goods.

And from that time forth they troubled not the city on the Sabbath day.

VINCENNES MYSTERY SOLVED

THAT MRS. CULBERTSON ENDED OWN LIFE IS PROVEN.

Mrs. Longwell of Chicago Vindicated by Developments in Strange Death of Former Nurse.

Vincennes, Ind.—That Mrs. Jessie Lee Overton Culbertson was not slain by a jealous rival, but ended her own life, has been proven by evidence discovered by the police Friday.

Of this there is no doubt, and her husband and relatives have tearfully acknowledged that their suspicions that she was killed at the instigation of another woman for jealous revenge were unfounded. The body of a miniature skeleton which had been attached to the skull found by Mrs. Culbertson when she was discovered gagged in the shed near her home last Wednesday, after swallowing carbolic acid, was picked up near the scene of the tragedy.

It lay concealed beneath a pile of debris where the disheartened woman had placed it after she removed the head and attached it to the threatening letter which she thought would lead the authorities to believe she was murdered for revenge. This toy skeleton Mrs. Culbertson is known to have had in her possession months ago. Positive proof that the suicide wrote the anonymous threatening letters to herself has also been established. A letter she wrote to her husband at Bridgeport, Ill., is written on stationery similar to that upon which was penned the anonymous notes. The water mark on the paper is the same on all the anonymous notes as that on the stationery found in the dead woman's trunk. When the water mark was showed to the bereaved husband and his parents they shook their heads and silently yielded to the revelation that there had been no murder committed.

It was Mrs. Etta Longwell, 708 Madison street, Chicago, formerly of Vincennes, whom the Culbertsons and Joshua Brazelton, the stepfather of the young husband, had been led to suspect, by the despondent Jessie, sought to injure her. Now they want to have it understood that if they were mistaken that the accused Chicago woman may establish proof that their charges to the police were unfounded.

"Her name should be cleared by all means," said Culbertson. "I cannot understand why Jessie should kill herself. She was strange, though, now that all this has happened to recall many things. She never would tell me about her past except in a general way. She said her father and mother were dead. I have heard that she formerly lived in Waco, Tex., and in Dublin, Tex., where she is said to have a brother. I have tried to communicate with relatives, but cannot get any word from them."

While Culbertson was talking, Chief of Police Evans and Detective James Hughes opened a letter written to him by his wife before they were married. This letter displayed the despondent nature of the girl.

MINERS WILL NOT STRIKE.

Decide to Remain at Work After April 1.

Scranton, Pa.—Reaffirming the demands already presented to the operators, the anthracite miners Wednesday night voted to remain at work after April 1 allowing the district executive boards of the hard coal fields of Pennsylvania to continue their efforts to get an agreement satisfactory to the men.

The miners were instructed by the convention to continue at work until such time as they are otherwise notified by the official representatives of the three anthracite districts, and the executive boards were instructed to negotiate an agreement upon such basis as the boards in their judgment believe the conditions warrant.

A resolution to ask President Taft to appoint a commission to arbitrate differences was adopted by the convention and referred to the executive boards to put it into effect at their discretion.

GEN. CASTRO SAILS FOR HOME.

Former President of Venezuela Intends to Defy His Enemies.

Havre. — Gen. Cipriano Castro, former president of Venezuela, was a passenger on the steamer Gaudeloupe of the Compagnie Generale Transatlantique, which sailed Friday from this port for Coron and other Latin-American points. Though Gen. Castro refused to tell where he intended to leave the steamer, or to discuss his plans, it was learned from a member of his party that the deposed dictator means to make his way back to Caracas and there confront his enemies, who have declared that he will be arrested on charges of conspiracy to bring about the murder of his successor, President Gomez. The several staterooms occupied by Castro and his party cost him $1,040.

"Like Francis I., all is lost save honor," Castro declared. "I am going back to Venezuela. My country needs me and my mission is there."

NEWS OF THE STATE

Summary of Matters of Special Interest to Our Readers

CONDENSED FOR BUSY PEOPLE.

Suit Instituted at Louisville by Commonwealth's Attorney to Prevent Further Construction Work on Gaiety Theater.

Louisville, Ky.—The commonwealth of Kentucky, on relation of Joseph M. Huffaker, commonwealth's attorney for the Thirteenth judicial district, filed suit against Rudolph K. Hynicka, of Cincinnati; Willis Kennedy and Marshall Morris, building inspector of the city of Louisville, seeking to enjoin further construction work of the Gaiety theater. The petition recites that on the 25th day of March Huffaker applied to Hon. James Breathitt, attorney general of Kentucky, asking him to bring suit, but the attorney general's opinion was that it was Huffaker's duty to institute proceedings.

Louisville, Ky. — Miss Edmonia Dougherty, chief telephone operator for the Illinois Central railroad at Louisville, is to have a substantial reward for her devotion to duty during the recent Seventh street station fire. At the first cry of "Fire!" she remained at her post, informing the various departments, and was one of the last to leave the burning building. The reward will be in the form of a trip to California, with all expenses paid, and with her salary continued during the vacation.

Owensboro, Ky.—The United States National bank of Owensboro, with capital stock of $300,000, will be the name of a new bank to be launched in this city. Application for charter has already been made at Washington. In the organization of the new bank three local banks, the Bank of Commerce, the Fourth State bank and the Eagle bank will be taken over. The new national bank will open for business with deposits of about $700,000. It is expected that E. T. Franks, who will shortly be succeeded as collector of internal revenue by Lawson Reno, will be president of the bank.

Louisville, Ky.—Liquor men here regard with a great deal of satisfaction the opinion given by the court of appeals at Frankfort in the case of the commonwealth against Peter Campbell, charged with violating a city ordinance by bringing into the town more than a quart of liquor. The dismissal of the warrant against Campbell in the circuit court was affirmed by the superior court. Liquor men contend that this will set a precedent against the operation of harsh and excessive local regulations directed at individuals who bring liquor to their homes in local option territory.

Louisville, Ky.—Judge Gordon held that an offense against the laws governing "void marriages," or miscegenation, could not be punished in any county save in that in which the alleged void marriage takes place. It was in the case of Thomas Baker, a white man, and Sadie Baker, his wife alleged to be a negress. Judge Gordon released the prisoners on a writ of habeas corpus.

Louisville, Ky.—The directors of the Citizens' Life Insurance Co. considered the report of Insurance Commissioner C. W. Bell on the company's affairs. The report was a high tribute to the company's financial condition but criticism of the officers dealing in the company's securities was sharp.

Louisville, Ky.—Dr. Vernon Robbins city chemist, sent to the general council a report on samples of water taken from 40 city pumps, showing that in almost every case the water is unfit to be drunk. A system of public hydrants for drinking purposes will likely replace the pumps.

Owenton, Ky.—Allen Overstreet, who stabbed and killed Walter See, 19 a farmer, of Sweet Owen, this county was taken to Covington, Ky., by Sheriff J. E. Lucas, where he will be kept until his arraignment. Feeling against the accused is intense.

Jackson, Ky.—The First National bank of Jackson definitely announced that it would open for business April 1. A delay has been occasioned by a proposed combination of the National bank and the Old Jackson Deposit bank.

London, Ky. — T. Rosh & Co., of Mt. Vernon, Ky., general merchandise; Willis Rice, a farmer and stock dealer, of Withers, Ky., and Robert Calloway, a locomotive fireman, of Middlesboro, Ky., filed voluntary petitions in bankruptcy here.

Louisville, Ky.—About 40 operators from the Western Kentucky coal fields, representing all of the big mining companies in that section, attended a conference here at which the proposed elimination of the tariff on foreign coal was discussed.

Louisville, Ky.—A call for a meeting of the Kentucky racing commission to meet in Lexington Thursday, April 1, has been issued by Secretary A. E. Ronse, for the purpose of allotting dates for the three clubs under the commission's jurisdiction.

Kentucky Pick-Ups

Lexington, Ky.—Prof. Linwood A. Brown, of the Agricultural College of North Dakota, has arrived here to accept appointment as chief drug chemist of the State experiment station.

Lexington, Ky.—The board of education has retained Attorneys W. P. Kimball and C. J. Bronston, and will go into the courts in an effort to get an increased appropriation for school purposes. The board wants $90,000 for the current year.

Louisville, Ky.—Now that it is certain that Judge William H. Holt, of this city, is to be sent as minister to Switzerland to succeed Brutus J. Clay, it is learned that a fight is to be begun at once for the scalp of Leslie Combs, of Lexington, who is now American minister to Peru.

Louisville, Ky.—Information was given here by one who is in constant touch with the affairs of the Burley Tobacco Society to the effect that the society is on its last legs and will survive no longer than it will require to deliver the 75,000,000 pounds of tobacco in the pool, which was recently sold to the American Tobacco Co. It is asserted that all the tobacco will be delivered and paid for by May 15 or June 1. It is claimed that the necessity of closing up the business of the last pool is the only tie that is now keeping the organization intact.

Louisville, Ky.—J. H. Mathena, a patrolman, 28, who had seen service in the Philipines, was stripped of his badge and discharged from the force at roll call by Chief J. H. Haager. Charges were filed against the officer that he had taken undue liberties with girls.

I received no benefit from any of them but seemed to suffer more. The last doctor said nothing would restore my health. I began taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound to see what it would do, and I am restored to my natural health."—Mrs. ETTA DONOVAN, Box 299, Willimantic, Conn.

"All are loud in their praises of the great crops and that wonderful country."—Extract from correspondence Nationa. Industrial Association of Au, ust, 1905.

It is now possible to secure a homestead of 160 acres free and another 160 acres at $3.00 per acre. Hundreds have paid the cost of their farms (if purchased) and then had a balance of from $10.00 to $12.00 per acre from one crop. Wheat, barley, oats, flax—all do well. Mixed farming is a great success and dairying is highly profitable. Excellent climate, splendid schools and churches, railways bring most every district within easy reach of market. Railway and land companies have lands for sale at low prices and on easy terms.

Bernard Jones, the young man who was kicked on the leg by a horse some time ago and had his leg broken, was mending so slowly that there was an evidence of a retarding influence in the broken bone, and it was decided by his physician to have an operation to determine the cause of the trouble. Friday afternoon his physician, Dr. J. G. Slater, assisted by Dr. B. K. Menefee opened the affected part and found a foreign substance close to the bone that was causing the trouble. This was removed and the bone scraped and Mr. Jones is now showing rapid improvement.

Leon Northcutt, an old and esteemed citizen of Kenton county, died at the residence of his daughter, Mrs. Albert Brittenhelm, in Walton, March 24th, after a lingering illness from dropsy. Mr. Northcutt had been ill for some time, but was able to come here on a visit, hoping the change would improve his condition, but taking suddenly worse, he gradually sunk into that eternal sleep. Mr. Northcutt was born in Kenton county, and was in his 76th year when death relieved him of his suffering. He leaves seven children by his first marriage, viz: Mrs. T. F. Curley, Mrs. John Hayes, Mrs. Albert Brittenhelm, Mrs. W. O. Rouse, Byron Northcutt, Marion Northcutt and Wm. Northcutt, the last three residing in Covington.
